This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

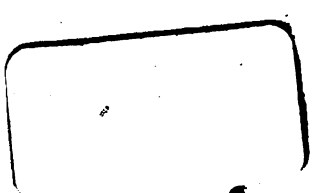
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

Tappan Presbyterian Association
LIBRARY

Presented by Mrs. Atterbury.
From Library of Rev. John G. Atterbury, D.D.
3037



BV
670
.M4

ESSAYS

ON

EPISCOPACY,

B0377.0

AND THE

APOLOGY

FOR

APOSTOLIC ORDER AND ITS ADVOCATES,

REVIEWED.

BY THE LATE

JOHN M. MASON, D. D.

EDITED BY THE

REV. EBENEZER MASON.

NEW-YORK:

PUBLISHED FOR THE EDITOR BY

ROBERT CARTER, 58 CANAL-STREET

PITTSBURGH: THOMAS CARTER.

1844.

ENTERED according to Act of Congress, in the year 1844, by EBENEZER MASON, in the Clerk's Office of the District Court for the Southern District of New-York.

NEW-YORK:
JOHN F. TROW & CO., PRINTERS,
No. 33 Ann-street.

gift
Tappan Presb. Ass
3-7-1932

CONTENTS.

PAGE.

EDITOR'S PREFACE, ... v
Introduction to the Christian Magazine, . . . i

REVIEWS.

I. ESSAYS ON EPISCOPACY.

The Essays reviewed, ... 15
Diocesan Episcopacy not sustained by an examination of Scriptural titles, . . . 37
The Jewish Priesthood, ... 66
The Church in our Lord's time, . . . 86
New Testament facts, ... 104
The official character of James, . . . 122
The Epistles to the seven churches, . . 133
Official character of Timothy and Titus, . . 153
The Testimony of the Fathers, . . . 208

II. HOBART'S APOLOGY. . 265

6-16-37 Gift

PREFACE.

THE public have recently been presented with a reprint of "An Apology for Apostolic order and its advocates—in a "series of letters addressed to the Rev. John M. Mason, D. "D., by the Rev. John Henry Hobart, an assistant minister "of Trinity Church." Had the original title been retained, it would have obviated the necessity of stating, that this "Apology" was "occasioned by the strictures and denunciations of the 'Christian Magazine.'" The Christian Magazine was a periodical, in which certain newspaper "Essays on Episcopacy," collected and published by Mr. Hobart, in a separate volume, were reviewed. These Essays had been called forth by previous writings of Mr. Hobart, and were written by one Presbyterian and four Episcopalians, of which Mr. Hobart was one, The first number of the Review produced such floundering among the admirers of "Apostolic order," that forthwith Mr. Hobart, like a bold leader, rushed to the rescue; and to cover his discomfiture, and rally his force, he occupied a very considerable portion of his Apology, with an attack, not upon the "Review of the Essays," but upon all the original articles of the "Magazine" itself; which subserved his purpose of diversion; and upon some subjects,* which had no more to do with the question of "Apostolic order" than a mitred Bishop has to do with an uncovenanted, unauthorized non-Episcopally-ordained preacher of the gospel.

This "Apology" was briefly reviewed in the 'Christian

* See Hobart's Apology, especially Letter xvi.

Magazine," but that "review" was not republished in the collection made of Dr. Mason's works, inasmuch as it was believed desirable, not to recall public attention by a specific reference to a work, which, whatever claims it may possess in the vindication of the Hierarchy, possesses none for self-possession and apostolic dignity. And the grave had recently closed over the authors of each. The Editor (Bishop Ives) of this second edition, appears to have been somewhat sensible of this, and assigns, as an apology for its republication, "that the strictures and denunciations which called "forth this triumphant defence of the truth, have recently "been given to the public, in all the 'offensiveness of their "original forms.'" This apology of the editor needs one ingredient to made it valid—Truth. The Review, which called out Mr. Hobart, has not been recently republished—it was republished twelve years since in the collection of Dr. Mason's works. The volume recently published, was "Essays upon the Church," not the Episcopal church—and which at the time of their appearance in the Christian Magazine, Mr. Hobart pronounced to be the only original article Dr. Mason had not penned. Apology, p. 8. It seems accuracy in facts, and correctness of application, are not necessarily connected with the lawn of the Bishop.

The re-appearance of the Apology justifies a republication both of the introduction to the Christian Magazine, and of the brief review of the Apology itself. That review does not enter into any arguments upon the subject of "Apostolic order," as the review of the Essays was then in course of publication, in which the arguments contained in the Apology, are necessarily examined.

We may not extend our remarks upon several points worthy of them: the effect which the Review of the "Essays on Episcopacy" produced at the time of its appearance—the almost entire suspension of the controversy for thirty years, till a new and different audience had risen up—the character of that audience—the reasons which have now given this subject a fresh importance—the notion of the numerical force of Episcopacy.* But we are restrained. We cannot, however, close without noticing the course which the Episcopal controversy is taking. Of late years serious differences have arisen among Episcopalians themselves; and there has been exhibited tendencies, both in doctrine and in government, alarming to many within its pale; and a source of deep regret and solicitude to intelligent and devoted Christians, without as well as within its bounds. But more recently, advantage has apparently been taken of incidental events, which under other circumstances would have been unnoticed, (and the publication of this Apology is an instance,) to change the place and character of the contest, from within to the outside of the Church; from a domestic contest to a foreign contest; from a question of Episcopal assumptions over one another, to a question of the institution of the Episcopal Hierarchy;—in short, there is an apparent desire to heal internal dissension, by raising the cry, "The Church is in danger" from the attacks of its inveterate opponents outside of its pale. This is a very common artifice; it may succeed. If it does succeed, it will be a sad success over freedom of conscience and intelligent piety; it will be a success in riv-

* The arithmetic of "the Church" must be peculiar, and its "Apostolic order" must have a perception like that which pertained to Major Jack Downing's glory spectacles.—They claim a "greater proportion of the Reformed Church," (see Hob. Ap., p. 100, note,) and of the United States too? Is the proof made up geographically? We have heard of an incumbent of three parishes, from which he drew near $2,500 per annum, without any building in two of them, and if, in the building of the third, all the Episcopal residents of the three parishes should have been collected at the same time, he would have addressed an audience of seven souls; or is the proof made out numerically as they do in the old country, reckon all with the Church, who from disinclination, as well as necessity, go to no place of worship, not even Episcopal; and sometimes their statistics amount to a greater number than the parish furnishes inhabitants. It was, I suppose, according to the Church's arithmetic, a clergyman in the North of Ireland claimed three fourths of the United States, as Unitarians. But what has numbers to do with the validity of the Episcopal order? True enough! What?

eting more strongly spiritual domination, in substituting modes and the opus operatum for the fruits of the Spirit; and in ultimately driving out from its fellowship, some who from preference, choice, and even conviction, would rather remain (as a salt indeed) within its communion. Non-Episcopalians may not, nor need they, decline any examination of their position, either as to principle, or as to results; and sure we are, it is their duty to give place, no! not for an hour, to the dogma of unbroken apostolic succession in the Episcopal Church, with all its train of antiquity tradition, ritual imposition, baptismal regeneration, sinning and unchurching arrogance. We have a more sure word of prophecy, unto which we would take heed, far better than the prophecies of any Mitred Head, be it that of my Lord Bishop or of His Holiness the Pope.

EBENEZER MASON.

New-York, Jan. 8th, 1844.

NOTE.—The reference, in the Reviews to the "Apology," are to the second edition of that work recently published.

There has been prepared a full index to the Review of the Essays, for the convenience of reference.

A few sentences of the "Introduction to the Christian Magazine," have been omitted for convenience in the publication. A reference to the Magazine will show them to be unimportant.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

CHRISTIAN MAGAZINE.

Deference to public opinion, and that frankness which is generally safe and always honourable, demand an explanation of the origin, design, and nature of the present work. This is the more expedient, as considerations of some force appear hostile to the undertaking. The vanity of authorship might find ampler means of gratification than the fugitive numbers of a magazine: it is a temper of no amiable cast which delights in measuring the weapons of theological warfare.

Many own the gospel of salvation more from custom than from conviction; and, accordingly, pass their lives in a dry and sterile profession. Many treat it with indifference under the name of liberality. Many corrupt its doctrines; fritter away its sense; and in exchange for the life-blood of its consolation, offer to the perishing soul a vain theory, or a frigid criticism. Many, and that among our youth, to show, in appearance, their bravery of spirit, but in reality to shield their lusts, reject it altogether as unworthy not only of credence, but even of inquiry. The mischiefs arising from these sources are increased by the activity of a "zeal not according to knowledge." Some, excluding the light of the understanding, place their religion in fervour of feeling. Some clamour incessantly for doctrine; as if the heart had nothing to do in the service of God; or as if practical holiness were a necessary fruit of speculative orthodoxy. Some, like the self-justifiers of old, "tithe mint and anise and cummin;" and like them, too, "omit the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith;" little concerned about either "receiving Christ Jesus the Lord," or "walking in him," provided they be exact in their routine of ceremonies. Some, poisoning the gospel in its fountain head, shut out the unconverted from all interest in the invitations of its grace; and, as if the authority of God were to be annihilated with the same blow which fells the hope of the sinner, do, with their might, what Paul declared he and his fellow Apostles did not—"make void the law through faith." Some appear to lay as much stress upon their external order, as if the key which opens the door of their communion, opened, at the same moment, the doors of Paradise; although, upon that supposition, it is evident that the "gate" and "way" which "lead unto life" are no longer "straight and narrow." Some, in the opposite extreme, account the external order of the house of God a matter of no importance; and are chargeable, for this their negligence, with countenancing, at least indirectly, violation of their Lord's commandment, invasion of his prerogative, and assault upon his truth. And as though all this were not enough, there are not wanting others to lay their axe at the root of entire Christianity, by endeavouring to set aside the distinctive character, and the authentic call of the gospel ministry. Addressing themselves to the avarice of one class, to the conceit of another, to the credulity of a third, and to the ignorance of all, it is not wonderful that they should draw many after "their pernicious ways." Their proscribing from the ministry all learning, taste, and talents, through an avowed jealousy for the glory of divine teaching, may impose for a while upon a guileless Christian, who suspects no harm when the grace of God is extolled; but it will be well if the mask shall be found to have concealed the tendency of their principles from their own view.

Whether this representation be just or not, is known to every one who has the faculty of observation, and the will to use it. And whether or not such a state of things, conspiring with the intemperate pursuit of wealth, with the gradual relaxation of every social bond; with the violence of political ferment; and with the approach of those fearful days which are coming upon the earth, can fail to grieve the serious, to ensnare the unwary, to stumble the thoughtful, to multiply the profane, and to spread "confusion and every evil work," will admit of but one answer. What, then, is to be done? Shall we slumber on till the midnight cry awake us, and the season of action be over? Shall we, because prospects are bad, give up all for lost; and sit down desponding, till the deluge of abominations sweep us away? God forbid! It is the dictate of both reason and revelation, to "redeem the time because the days are evil." No man can tell what an extent of ruin the efforts of those, or a considerable number of those, who love "the truth as it is in Jesus," commencing at this hour, may avert from their families, from their country, and from the church of God. One of the most obvious means of success is the calling their attention to those subjects of faith and practice which derive a new interest from the "signs of the times." The precious truths of the gospel must be maintained, vindicated, urged upon their consciences—They must be stimulated where they are slack, and instructed where they are ignorant—They must be taught to contemplate in a juster light than has been common, the nature, and value, of the Redeemer's institutions—They must be put on their guard against the many "Anti-christs" which, in various shapes, are "abroad in the world"—They must be cautioned against those "swelling words of vanity," and those "fair speeches" of craft, by which they are in danger of being misled—They must learn to explore the foundations not only of that saving truth, but of that comely order, and those costly privileges, which were "once delivered to the saints," and have been consecrated by the blood of martyrs—to "walk about Zion, and go round about her; to tell the towers thereof; to mark well her bulwarks, and consider her palaces, that they may tell it to the generation following"—They must be able, with meekness and dignity, both to "give a reason of the hope that is in themselves," and of their opposition to the errors of others—They must be led to a better knowledge of the Holy Scripture than can be acquired from the repetition of elementary principle, however "beautiful in its season," or essential in its place—They must be persuaded to seek after those ministrations which shall "feed them with knowledge and with understanding;" and to exert themselves, in the application of suitable means for procuring to the ministry a succession of "able" and "faithful men," who "need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth"—They must look at Christianity, not merely as it lies in the pages of their Bibles, and their confessions of faith; but also as it has been embodied in the holy characters, the active lives, and the peaceful death of their brethren who are gone to the "recompense of reward," and whose "faith" it is their duty and happiness to "follow." Their solicitude is also to be excited toward their children. Perhaps there is no obligation disregarded with less remorse, or more fatal effects, than that of bringing up youth in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." Christian families are as certainly the nurseries of the church upon earth, as she is herself the nursery of the church in heaven. Nor is there a more alarming symptom of her condition than the few, the very few, who tread in the steps of their religious parents. Old Christians are dying off, and a proportionable number of young ones does not step forward to occupy their stations. Wo to that generation by which the testimony of God shall be abandoned! But wo also to that generation which is preparing the "seed of evil doers" that shall perform the accursed work! They who now fill the Christian church ought to tremble lest at their doors be laid the guilt of rearing an infidel progeny; and at their hands be required the blood of sons and daughters to be born in ages to come. If any thing vigorous is to be expected in remedying the evil, Christians must pause. They must ask whether or not they do right in courting for their offspring that "friendship of the world" which is "enmity with God:" whether they can now excuse themselves to their consciences, or will hereafter stand blameless before their judge, for their unfaithfulness to the children "whom he hath given them;" for their connivance at those profligate habits which are carrying pestilence into the bosom of domestic society; for the pitiable and criminal vanity of qualifying their boys and their girls for entering with eclat into that very world from which the voice of their God has enjoined them and theirs to "come out and be separate," if they hope to be acknowledged by Him as His "sons and His daughters."

All these are things of unutterable moment. They must be pondered with solemn regard. They must so mingle themselves with conviction and feeling, and conduct, as to change, in a great measure, the face of the visible church; or there is nothing before us but that desolation which will come "like a whirlwind," and will carry away in its course every individual and denomination that shall be unprepared for the shock. Let no man deceive himself, nor those who listen to him, with vain words. Let him not smile at these forebodings as childish, nor contemn them as fanatical. Let him, at least, before he venture upon such security, hold up the light of revelation to the objects which surround him, and he will perceive that the alarm is not without cause. Unbelief in suggestions founded upon the word of God, and enforced by his providence, is an ancient folly; "when they say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh." To ward off, or lighten the impending stroke, every minister of reconciliation should be alert at his post; every Christian parent should redouble his diligence in training up his children; every man of talents should consecrate his power; every man of wealth be forward in offering his substance; every man of devotion wrestle before the throne of God.

To throw something into the common scale is the design of the Christian's Magazine. To require in its numbers an exemplification of all that energy and those excellencies which have just been pronounced indispensable to the Christian weal, would be unreasonable; as it would demand from a few individuals what cannot be accomplished but by the conjoined piety and labour of thousands. This work will fulfil its task by erecting a standard round which the friends of truth may rally—by discussing topics which may prompt the spirit of research—by diffusing religious information; and by firm resistance to attempts from the press to pervert scriptural principle, or undermine the scriptural institutions.

In order, however, to avoid unmerited blame, and to preclude misconception with regard to some material articles, the following observations may not be impertinent.

1. The Prospectus specifies merely the subjects which are to be handled; but nothing as to their order or proportion. The quantity of religious intelligence, in particular, must greatly vary: not only because events do not happen at regular intervals, but because it is often hard to ascertain the truth. The Editor does not dissemble his fears that he shall frequently be unable to gratify, on this point, the laudable curiosity of his readers; and he can tender them no equivalent for occasional disappointment, but his care not to amuse them with fiction instead of fact.

2. The Magazine will support that Ecclesiastical government which combines the visible unity of the Church Catholic with perfect equality of rank among her ministers; and the chief of those tenets which are known as the doctrines of the reformation. The attacks now made in various directions upon the former, and the odium so industriously heaped upon the latter, have no influence in shaking the editor's attachment to either; nor in deterring him from vindicating both before the face of the sun. Deeply convinced that in this system of government, and these doctrines of faith, are contained the law of God's house, and the "wells of salvation," he cannot admit into the Magazine, any thing repugnant to them. That pruriency of debate, which sets up falsehood for the pleasure of knocking it down, is a compound, in nearly equal parts, of vanity and weakness. It would be quite as wise and commendable in a physician to poison his patient that he might try the force of his antidote. The antidote might be good, and upon the whole successful; but if by any accident, a life should be sacrificed to his experiments, the fame of his skill would be a costly purchase. There are enough to propagate falsehood without the aid of those who should destroy it. The duty of Christians is to confront and repel, not abet the enemy, nor admit him into their camp in order to subdue him. According to its resources, the Christian's Magazine will not be backward in strengthening their hands and stirring up their zeal in this contest. It can never descend to altercation; yet if it should, on any occasion, be so unfortunate as to misrepresent persons or things, a correction of the mistake, when demonstrated to the editor, will be thankfully received and cheerfully inserted. It also engages that while it will maintain and expose error without reserve or scruple, no abuse nor virulence shall pollute its pages.

3. In reviewing books, considerable latitude must be allowed.

This part of the work is arduous, as it demands more than ordinary self-denial, and cannot be executed without sometimes risking the displeasure even of those whom we have neither interest nor inclination to offend. Authors, in general, are not the most patient or least irritable of beings. Even good men are apt to be intractable when they array themselves in print, and to be nearly as much disconcerted by a critical rebuke, as if they had been libelled for a crime. But there is no help for it. Justice must be distributed without "fear, favour, or affection." There is no other way of informing the reader or improving the writer. It is, indeed, common for reviewers to profess impartiality. And if by impartiality be meant, giving to every writer his due, according to one's best judgment, the Christian's Magazine claims to be impartial. But if impartiality consist in strictures on an author's style and manner, and a fair statement of his opinions without deciding on their quality, then it solemnly disclaims all such impartiality. The very use of a religious Review is to distinguish the "precious" from the "vile." Is it in religion only that we may prevaricate? In the most tremendous of all concerns that we are to be undecided? Are we to punish every transgression of literary law; and to let slander upon the gospel, and assassination of the souls of men, pass without reproof, lest we should be branded as uncharitable? The good Lord deliver us from such charity. It has always appeared to the editor, how plausible soever the appellations bestowed upon it, to be treason against the highest allegiance, and to mark the union of cowardice and fraud. If, therefore, any one shall hope to see in this Review no discrimination of religious doctrines; no preference shown to those which guide to the "path of life," over those which lead to "bottomless perdition," he will be much disappointed. Whatever may be its other imperfections, no man shall accuse it of trimming on the points of faith and duty.

4. As the object of the Magazine cannot be attained without the editor's control over its materials, he will feel himself not only at liberty, but under obligation, to make such alterations in the pieces which may be offered for insertion, as he shall judge expedient. His literary friends will be considered as acceding to this condition in all their communications which shall not be accompanied with a contrary request. When such cases shall occur, and the pieces be thought exceptionable, they will of course be suppressed, and remain subject to the disposal of their authors.

REVIEW

OF

ESSAYS ON EPISCOPACY.

REVIEW.

A Collection of Essays on the subject of Episcopacy, which originally appeared in the Albany Centinel, and which are principally ascribed to the Rev. Dr. Linn, the Rev. Mr. Beasley, and Thomas Y. How, Esq. With additional notes and remarks. 8vo. p. p. 210. New-York, T. & J. Swords, 1806.

EARLY in the summer of 1804, the Rev. John Henry Hobart, an assistant minister of Trinity Church, New-York, published a work, entitled, "A Companion for the Altar: consisting of a short explanation of the Lord's Supper; and meditations and prayers, proper to be used before, and during the receiving of the Holy Communion, according to the form prescribed by the Protestant Episcopal Church, in the United States of America." This was followed, in the fall of the same year, by another compilation, from the pen of the same gentleman, entitled, "A Companion for the Festivals and Fasts of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America."

These volumes, especially the former, appeared, at the time of their publication, not only to the non-episcopal reader, but, if we are correctly informed, to discreet Episcopalians themselves, to advance claims which it is extremely difficult to substantiate.

Of the nature of these claims, the following extract from the Companion for the Altar, will give a general idea.

" The Judge of the whole earth indeed will do right. The grace of God quickens and animates all the degenerate children of Adam. The mercy of the Saviour is co-extensive with the ruin into which sin has plunged mankind. And 'in every nation, he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him.' But where the Gospel is proclaimed, communion with the church by the participation of its ordinances, at the hands of the duly authorized priesthood, is the indispensable condition of salvation. Separation from the prescribed government and regular pristhood of the church, when it proceeds from involuntary and unavoidable ignorance or error, we have reason to trust, will not intercept from the humble, the penitent, and obedient, the blessings of God's favour. But when we humbly submit to that priesthood which Christ and his apostles constituted; when, in the lively exercise of penitence and faith, we partake of the ordinances administered by them, we maintain our communion with that church which the Redeemer purifies by his blood, which he quickens by his Spirit, and whose faithful members he will finally crown with the most exalted glories of his heavenly kingdom. The important truth which the universal church has uniformly maintained, that, to experience the full and exalted efficacy of the sacraments, we must receive them from a valid authority, is not inconsistent with that charity which extends mercy to all who labour under involuntary error. But great is the guilt, and imminent the danger, of those who, possessing the means of arriving at the knowledge of the truth, negligently or wilfully continue in a state of separation from the authorized ministry of the church, and participate of ordinances administered by an irregular and invalid authority. Wilfully rending the peace and unity of the church, by separating from the ministrations of its authorized priesthood; obstinately contemning the means which God in his sovereign pleasure, hath prescribed for their salvation, they are guilty of rebellion against their Almighty Law-giver, and Judge; they expose themselves to the awful displeasure of that Almighty Jehovah, who will not permit his institutions to be condemned, or his authority violated, with impunity." This from the "Meditation" for "Saturday evening." p. 202—204.

As we have quoted the passage, rather in order to connect the circumstances which gave rise to the "collection" immediately under review, than to subject it to rigid criticism; we forbear commenting on several assertions, in maintaining which the reverend writer, if a little pressed, might perhaps find that he has no ingenuity to spare. We now consider it in reference to the subject of the "Essays."

Extravagant as such pretensions must seem to those whose convictions are of a different sort, and offensive as they were to individuals whose predilections are certainly not anti-episcopal, no notice, so far as we know, was taken of Mr. Hobart's productions, nor any thing published on the other side, till the summer of 1805. Then a writer, generally supposed to be the Rev. Dr. Linn, introduced into "the Albany Centinel," under the head of "Miscellanies, No. ix." some free strictures on the Episcopal claims. He immediately met with an antagonist of no mean powers, under the signature of a Layman of the Episcopal Church, who is understood to be Thomas Y. How, Esq. To the aid of the latter came the Rev. Frederick Beasley, Rector of St. Peter's Church, Albany, with the venerable name of Cyprian. Clemens, or Dr. L. himself, shortly appeared in favour of the Miscellanist; as the battle waxed sore, the band of the hierarchy was joined by two right reverend prelates, the one from this state, as Cornelius; the other from Pennsylvania, as an Episcopalian; together with Mr. (now Dr.)

HOBART himself, in the twofold form of Detector and Vindex; while the Miscellanist re-appeared in the characters of Umpire and an Inquirer. By the forces thus marshalled, five against one, the warfare was protracted till the public grew weary, and the printer interposed to effect an armistice. However, that the record and the fruits of so memorable a campaign might not be lost, the Rev Mr. HOBART did not think it a misapplication of his time, nor a disservice to his church, to gather the pieces of both parties, and republish them in a separate volume with a preface, annotations, and comments of his own. We, accordingly, take up the "collection" as it came from his hands.

We have heard a suggestion of unfairness in this transaction. We do not see how the charge can be supported, unless the writers on the Episcopal side have been permitted to alter and amend their essays without extending the same privilege to their opponents. The modification of a single paragraph may cover with ridicule the most forcible argument which was directed against it before the modification, and would insult the reader by imposing upon him something which was not the subject of remark. Of so degrading an artifice no reputable man ought to be lightly suspected. As we have no such suspicion, and as this alone could justify a charge of unfairness, we do not see that Mr. H. is at all reprehensible for republishing a set of essays which had been thrown upon the world without any pecuniary restriction, and accompanying them with such criticism as he deemed just.

Mr. H. observes in his preface, that "the friends of the church and of Episcopacy, however reluctant to discuss an important religious topic in a public paper, were compelled to resort to the same mode, for defence, which the author of Miscellanies had chosen for his attack." We lament, as sincerely as themselves, that a Newspaper was selected for such a discussion. We lamented it from the first. We never flattered ourselves that it would operate with a favourable influence either on the cause of truth, or on the social feeling of the community.

But when Mr. H. and the Layman, and Cyprian, all complain of being assaulted in the peaceful exercise of a common right, and thus endeavour to throw the odium of aggression upon the author of "Miscellanies," it is rather over-acting. To exclude all non-episcopalians from "the church which the Redeemer purifies by his blood, and quickens by his Spirit,"—to pronounce all their ministrations "irregular and invalid,"—to charge them with "great guilt" and threaten them with "imminent danger," for "negligently or wilfully continuing in a state of separation" from the episcopal church—to represent them as "wilfully rending the peace and unity of the church; as obstinately contemning the means which God hath appointed for their salvation;" as "guilty of rebellion against their Almighty Law-giver, and Judge,"—to publish all this to the world; and then most gravely to tell these same non-episcopalians, that there is no attack upon them; but only a little wholesome admonition for the edification of devout episcopalians on the evening before the Holy Communion! and, moreover, to put on a lofty air, and break out into angry rebuke, toward those who are not satisfied with their explanation, is really an improvement in polemical finesse. But hold! let us look again at these pretty figures of rhetoric, by which thunderbolts, hurled at the heads of opponents, are converted into the gentle dews of instruction and consolation to friends—Schismatics, usurpers, renders of the church's unity, rebels against their Almighty Law-giver!—Verily, if this is no attack upon non-episcopalians, it is so like one, that we need a shrewd interpreter at our elbow, to prevent our mistaking it. "I never," said Jack, of Lord Peter's brown bread, "saw a piece of mutton in my life, so nearly resembling a slice from a twelve-penny loaf!!"

If Mr. H. had intended an attack upon the anti-episcopal denominations, in what manner could he have made it? Not by assailing them individually in the street: not by entering their houses and reading them a lecture on schism: not even by preaching against them in his own place of worship: for this would be "instructing his own people;" and if any others should happen to stroll in, he could not help that, more than he could hinder their buying and reading his books; which, according his own account, he neither desired nor expected. It is the dictate of common sense that if an author print and publish severe reflections upon any body of men, he not only attacks them, but does it in the most open manner possible. If one of our citizens should write and advertise in the Gazettes, a pamphlet, calling all the members of the community, but those of his own sect, traitors and rebels to the government, would Mr. H. or any body else, comprehended in the charge, be satisfied with such an apology as this: "You, have no right, sir, to be offended with any part of my pamphlet. It is true, I have called you a rebel and a traitor, but you should not construe these epithets into an attack upon you; for the least candour will enable you to perceive that I published my pamphlet for the exclusive use of my own connexions?" Would this, we ask, convince Mr. H. or any one else, and send him home perfectly satisfied to be denounced, as a rebel and a traitor, so often as a zealous partisan might judge it conducive to the edification of his own particular friends? We believe not. Neither will the non-episcopalians be satisfied with Mr. H's. apology for himself. They will probably view it as a stratagem, and not a very deep one, to avoid the unpopularity of appearing as the aggressor. Some of them, too, may consider Mr. H's. books as the continuance of a system of attack which commenced several years ago, when a certain preacher declared to the faces of some of the most venerable ministers in this city, that all clergymen not episcopally ordained, are impostors; their commissions, forgeries; and their sacraments, blasphemy.*

These aspersions raised a great clamour at the time; and the repetition of them by Mr. H. and

* The preacher was Mr. WRIGHT; the place, St. Paul's church; the occasion, a deacon's ordination; and the text, of which, to use his own words, he "took leave," in order to give the poor non-episcopalians a hit, that injunction of our Lord, "Be ye wise as serpents, and harmless as doves." That the orator was right in taking this "leave," will hardly be questioned, as he immediately broke through the second precept of his text; and the consequences proved that he had but little skill in the first. The effusion had more of every thing in the serpent, than his wisdom; and more of every thing in the dove, than her innocence.

A circumstance which rendered the attack an outrage, was the care of the episcopal clergy to circulate notice of the ordination, and their solicitude for the attendance of their non-episcopal brethren! One of the latter, who was present, remarked, at the close of the service, with the pith and point of indignant feeling, that "Mr. W. possessed a large stock of confidence, to tell his bishop to his face, that he was an unregenerated man, and no member of the Christian church!" It being well known that the Right Reverend Father in God, SAMUEL, bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the State of New-York, had been baptized by the Rev. Mr. DUBOIS, one of the ministers of the Reformed Dutch Church. Therefore,—&c. Alas! Alas!

others, though in more decent language, has been loudly censured, as a violation of all the rules of prudence and charity. Of their prudence we say nothing. And the offence against charity is not the point of difficulty with us. Nor do we think that the author of "Miscellanies," in declaiming against episcopal "bigotry and superstition," has taken the question by the proper handle. These are, at best, ungracious compliments, which, though they may vent the ire of the writer, contribute little to the emolument of the reader; and are generally repaid with good will, and with large interest. Truth, can admit of no compromise with error, nor does charity require it. They are the truly charitable who point out the way of life, and warn their fellow men of dangerous mistake. Therefore we shall neither dispute the right of an Episcopalian to publish his peculiar sentiments, nor when they happen to bear hard upon others, shall we cry out against their uncharitableness. Our concern is with their truth or falsehood. And as we are far from impeaching the sincerity of Mr. H. and his coadjutors, whatever we may think of their discretion; so our criticisms are intended to apply to them solely as authors. For their personal characters, we entertain unfeigned respect. Nor can we be justly charged with violating that respect, though we examine their claim with as little ceremony as they have brought it forward. If the errour be ours, let them overwhelm our darkness with the effulgence of their light—if the error be theirs, God forbid that any human regards should prevail with us to pass it gently by. With the imperial Stoick, we "aim at truth, by which no man was ever injured."*

They tell us then, that their "priesthood" is the only "authorized ministry"—that the church in which it officiates, is the only one in covenant with God—that where the gospel is proclaimed, communion with this church, by the participation of its ordinances at the hands of the duly authorized priesthood, is the indispensable condition of salvation—that whatever mercy may be extended to those who labour under involuntary errour, such as negligently or wilfully continue in a state of separation from the authorized ministry of the church, and participate of ordinances administered by an irregular and invalid authority, are guilty not only of schism, but of contempt of God's institutions; of rebellion against his government, and of exposing themselves to his awful displeasure. In fewer words, their doctrine is, that non-episcopalians are no part of the Christian church; but are "children of wrath," and without a single hope founded on covenanted mercy. No "repentance toward God;" no "faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ;" no conformity to his image; no zeal for his glory, can be of any avail. The simple fact of their separation from the "authorized," that is to say, from the episcopal "priesthood," mars their religion, and renders it stark naught!

* Ζητῶ τὴν ἀλήθειαν ὑφ' ἧς οὐδεὶς πώποτε ἐβλάβη.—Mar. Anton. Lib. I. c. 21. p. 50. ed. Gatakeri.

This sweeping sentence of proscription is softened by representing it as "not inconsistent with that charity which extends mercy to all who labour under involuntary errour." But the relief is not worth accepting. For in the first place, so much is necessary to constitute "involuntary," or as it is elsewhere called, "unavoidable," errour, that the instances in which the plea should be substantiated would be rare indeed. Access to means of instruction precludes it effectually. And as there are few districts where this question can be agitated, without episcopalians, or their priests, or their writings, the errour must almost always be wilful; in which case the retreat is cut off—and secondly, we have no ground to expect even this very precarious mercy, but the charity of Mr. H. and his brethren! Warrant from the word of God they have produced none, and have none to produce. If communion with the authorized, or Episcopal priesthood, be to those among whom the Gospel is proclaimed, an indispensable condition of salvation, what possible escape can be left for those who reject it? The very idea of such an escape, however to be effected, is repugnant to that of an indispensable condition. No: if the condition be indispensable, they who reject it must perish. And if they who reject it may still be saved, it is not indispensable: otherwise, the definition might run thus, an indispensable condition is that which may be dispensed with! The alternative then is, EPISCOPACY OR PERDITION!! Prove this, and there is but one way for us: rush into the arms of the Episcopal Church, and the sooner the better! Prove this, and for our part, little as we are inclined to such a transition at present, we will take refuge immediately in her communion! He is a fool who would put his soul in jeopardy for a single moment, by rejecting an "indispensable condition of salvation;" and risk the loss of Heaven upon the credit of the charity of Mr. H. and Bishop HORSLEY!! We are sure that the drift, and have little doubt that the design, of a number of Episcopal publications is to force plain people into such a conclusion.

But before the authors can be justified in uttering a syllable which only looks toward such a conclusion, they ought to be perfectly certain of their premises. To unchurch, with a dash of the pen, all the non-episcopal denominations under Heaven; and cast their members, indiscriminately, into a condition worse than that of the very Heathen, is, to say the least of it, a most dreadful excommunication; and if not clearly enjoined by the authority of God, as criminal as it is dreadful. That all those glorious churches which have flourished in Geneva, Holland, France, Scotland, England, Ireland, &c. since the reformation; and all which have spread, and are spreading through this vast continent—that those heroes of the truth, who, though they bowed not to the mitre, rescued millions from the man of sin, lighted up the lamp of genuine religion, and left it, burning with a pure and steady flame to the generation following—that all those faithful ministers, and all those private christians, who, though not of the hierarchy, adorned the doctrine of God their Saviour, living in faith, dying in faith; scores, hundreds, thousands of them going away to their father's house under the strong consolations of the Holy Ghost, with anticipated heaven in their hearts, and its hallelujahs on their lips—that all, all were without the pale of the visible church; were destitute of covenanted grace; and left the world without any chance for eternal life, but that unpledged, unpromised mercy which their accusers charitably hope may be extended to such as labour under involuntary or unavoidable errour; and this merely because they renounced Episcopacy—are positions of such deep-toned horrour as may well make our hair stand up, "like quills upon the fretful porcupine;" and freeze the warm blood at its fountain. We say this sentance has been pronounced upon millions of the dead and of the living, merely because they were not, or are not, Episcopal. For Mr. H. and his friends have declared in substance, what their famous Dodwell has declared in form.

that, "the alone want of communion with the bishop, makes persons aliens from God and Christ, and strangers from the covenants of promise, and the commonwealth of Israel!"*

We shall hardly be accused of transgressing the bounds of moderation, when we demand for such assertions, proof which demolishes cavil, and shuts the mouth of reply. And if their authors cannot produce it; if they be not ready with demonstration, such as shall make "assurance double sure," they must abide the consequences of their temerity.

What the nature of their proof is, and how it will bear them out, we shall enable the reader to judge before we finish this review. We pause to make two observations.

1. The writers with whom we have to do, lay upon the form of church government a stress which is not laid upon it in the word of God. We are far from insinuating that the question is of small moment; we are persuaded, on the contrary, that it is of great moment; and that Christians are chargeable with much sin for the indifference which prevails among them concerning it. We can never grant that the appointments of our Lord Jesus Christ may be innocently neglected; nor that any one is excusable for not endeavouring to satisfy himself what these appointments are. But we are very sure that particular views of external church-order, are not the hinging point of salvation. Whether a man shall go to heaven or to hell, will be decided by another inquiry than whether he was an Episcopalian, a Presbyterian, or an Independent. The scriptures have fixed that inquiry to this point, whether he was a believer in the Lord Jesus Christ or not? He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved: and he that believeth not, shall be damned. Again. Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved. The reverse is, he that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed on the name of the only begotten son of God. According to these passages, faith in the Lord Jesus as he is exhibited in the Gospel, is "the indispensable condition of salvation."—According to Mr. H. and his compeers, participation of Christian ordinances at the hands of the Episcopal priesthood, is the indispensable condition of salvation. We are not ignorant that in other sections of his book, Mr. H. dwells with interest and force, on the necessity of a living and productive faith. We are glad to see so many things in a strain much more evangelical than pervades most of the ministrations in his church. But this inspires us with the deeper regret on account of the "dead flies" among the precious "ointment." Nor can we suppress our conviction, that in representing an adherence to Episcopacy as "the indispensable condition of salvation," himself, and DAUBENY, and a legion more, have done much toward misleading men's minds as to the foundation of eternal hope. That which wounds the bosom of tender piety, and of which we utterly deny the correctness, is their placing the external order of the church upon a level with the merits of our Lord Jesus, in the article of acceptance before God. We are positively told that soundness in the former is "the indispensable condition of salvation;" and faith in the latter cannot possibly be any more. Nay, with respect to non-episcopalians, Episcopacy is of primary, and faith in the Redeemer of secondary, importance: for we are told again, that "whoever is in communion with the bishop, the supreme Governor of the church upon earth, is in communion with Christ the head of it; and whoever is not in communion with the bishop, is thereby cut off from communion with Christ:" and this is said to be a "general conclusion" "established" by "the uniform testimony of ALL the apostolic and primitive writers."* After perusing the paragraph, we were held in suspense between the gaze of astonishment and the swell of indignation. Why, he who is acquainted with facts well knows; these gentlemen ought to know; and, in due season, others whom it concerns shall know. The meaning is not obscure. There is no access to communion with Christ, but through communion with the bishop. Yet, Mr. H. himself being judge, true faith vitally unites its possessor to the Redeemer;* and in this "vital union" originates all communion with him. If, therefore, faith in Christ produces communion with him, and this communion is inaccessible but through the medium of the bishop, it follows that faith in Christ is impossible where there is no communion with the bishop: and that all non-episcopalians are, of necessity, infidels. And thus our position is proved, that Episcopacy is held up as of primary, and faith in Christ as of secondary, importance. For as both are "indispensable conditions of salvation," that one upon which the existence of the other depends, must be the more important of the two. And this is not an example of that sort of priority which obtains in the relation of means to ends; the use of the former preceding the attainment of the latter; so that the end, which is the greater, presupposes and follows the means, which are the less. The case before us, we say, is not of this sort: because we have access to the testimony of God, which must be believed in order to salvation, without going through the gate of Episcopacy. It may be urged, that faith in Christ includes the principle of obedience to his institutions; and therefore to resist them, is to show the want of that obedience which flows from faith. Doubtless the faith of Christ does include such a principle. But this no more proves particular views of church order, than it proves particular views of any thing else which is regulated by Christ's authority, to be the "indispensable condition of salvation." Habitual disobedience to any of his known commands will exclude from his kingdom. Yet there are sins both of ignorance and infirmity which consist with a gracious state. And why an errour about church-government is not to be classed among these, the Bible has assigned no reason. And if the high church-men will push their own doctrine, it will compel them to excommunicate each other in their turn. For it is no secret that there have been material differences among them on their favourite theme: and nothing can exceed their confusion and mutual contradiction, when they attempt to found their hierarchy on the scriptures.

* That M. H. treads closely after Dodwell, see "Companion for the Festivals and Fasts," p. 59. And that the author of "memorial of the late Bishop Hobart," if a judgment may be drawn from his remerks upon these Essays, treads equally close. See "memorial."

* Companion for the Festivals and Fasts, p. 59. from Daubeny. Quere. How many bow-shots are such writers off from the territory of "our sovereign Lord the Pope?"

* Companion for the Altar; meditation for Thursday.

At times, we acknowledge, they concede the possibility of "penitence" and a "true faith" out of their church, for it is upon this concession that they rest their charity for the non-episcopalian. But as their concession is in diametrical repugnance to their argument, it only lets us see that they flinch from, the consequences of their own doctrine.

Upon the whole, we have the best evidence that they lay an unwarrantable stress upon the form of ecclesiastical order, by erecting communion with their priesthood into an "indispensable condition of salvation." The alarm which they have sounded on this subject, is vox et prætereà nihil, mere noise; and need give no disquiet to the most timid conscience.

2. Our next observation is, that as Mr. H. and his fellows have denied all communion with Christ, to non-episcopalians they are bound to show, that there is at least, more of the truth and efficacy of the gospel in the Episcopal church than in all other connexions. This is not drawing invidious comparisons between Christian denominations, but on their own principles, a perfectly fair comparison between the church of Christ and a set of associations which do not belong to it. We shall account it no hard task to prove as much of the church of Christ according to our views; nor ought they. For assuredly, if there is not within his church much more of power and love, and of a sound mind;" much more of the fear of God; of "receiving Christ Jesus the Lord" and "walking in him;" of reverential attendance upon his worship; of domestic and personal godliness; in one word, much more of the spiritual life, and of that "holiness without which no man shall see the Lord;" if much more of these things be not found within his church than without it, "what doth it profit?" Will Mr. H. meet the ordeal? Will he accompany us from temple to temple, from pulpit to pulpit, from house to house, from closet to closet, and agree, that in proportion as there is little or much of "pure and undefiled religion" in them, their grade in the scale of Christian churches shall be low or high? Is it, then, a fact, that in the church which boasts of the only valid ministrations, and the exclusive prerogative of being in covenant with God, there is more evangelical preaching; more of Christ crucified; more plain, close, decisive dealing with the consciences of men, upon the things which belong to their peace, than in many of the churches which she affects to despise? Is it a fact, that her "authorized priesthood" are more scrupulous about the preservation of pure communion; that they object more strongly to the admission of mere men of the world; and are more active in excluding from their fellowship the openly irreligious, than are others? Is it a fact, that they adopt more prompt and vigorous measures to expel from their pulpits doctrine which flies in the face of their avowed principles, and is acknowledged by themselves to be subversive of the Christian system? Is it a fact, that in this "primitive Apostolic" church, the sheep of Christ and his lambs are more plentifully fed with "the bread of God which came down from heaven?" Or that she has less to attract the thoughtless gay, and more to allure those who become seriously concerned about their eternal salvation, than is to be found in hundreds of churches which she virtually "delivers unto Satan?" Are these facts? We appeal to them who have eyes to see, and ears to hear; especially to them who "have tasted that the Lord is gracious." The interrogatories and the appeal are extremely painful: but we are driven to them by the champions of the hierarchy, who appropriate communion with Christ to their own connexions. We, therefore, put them upon their trial before the bar of scripture, of conscience, and of public criticism. We demand the evidence of their exclusive fellowship with the Redeemer; we demand it for our own sakes; we insist upon their showing, according to his word, the superiority of their practical religion both in quantity and quality. If they cannot or will not answer, no rational man will be at a loss for the reason.

An Episcopal church we do know, in which there are hundreds of ministers, and thousands of their people, who are "valiant for the truth;" who exemplify in their own persons the loveliness of the Christian character, and who, with respect to themselves, will never shrink from the strictest investigation. Would to God, we could say as much for all non-episcopalians! But these members of that church who give, in "the fruits of righteousness," unequivocal proof that the "Spirit of Christ is in them," are not the persons who advance or defend such claims as are set up by Messrs. Daubeny and Hobart. On the contrary, they most cordially welcome to their bosoms, as heirs with themselves of the grace of life, all those "who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity:" and they are hated, reviled, persecuted, by those very same high churchmen, who, like Mr. H. and his friends are for confining the covenant of salvation to their own precincts.

We have reached only the threshold of the work which we proposed to enter and examine. But if we have detained the reader with preliminary matter, it is because we could not do justice to the subject without it. He is now in possession of facts and reasonings to show that the actual discussions relative to Episcopacy, are not to be classed with those wrangles of party which amuse ignorant zealots, and disgrace sober inquiry. Nothing less is agitated than the question whether as non-episcopalians, we are to walk in the "faith of the gospel," in "joy of the Holy Ghost," and with a "hope that maketh not ashamed;" or be shut up under condemnation, reprobated by God and man? As we did not begin the controversy; nor engage in it till after long forbearance under multiplied provocation; and not even then, till we felt ourselves called upon, by an imperious sense of duty, to vindicate the perverted truth, and the absurd ordinances, of our master in Heaven; so, having begun, we shall not desist until we shall have exposed those arrogant pretensions, and fallacious reasonings, which are calculated to distress and deceive the hearts of the simple.

Mr. H. in his preface to this collection, assures the reader that,

> "The author of Miscellanies has, with great industry, collected together all the arguments against Episcopacy." p. iv.

We apprehend that Mr. H's zeal, in this paragraph, has outstripped his caution. A man professes to have a very extensive and accurate acquaintance with a subject, when he pledges himself to the public, that "all the arguments" on either side of a question relating to it, are contained in a work which he has written or edited. And if the work be defective, especially in material points, he subjects himself to comments most mortifying to his own feelings, most painful to his friends, and not desirable even to his opponents. We, therefore, think, and others may think with us before we shall have done, that Mr. H. ought not to have committed his reputation to the consequences of such an assertion. His reserve ought to have been the greater, as he has taken some pains to invite an examination of his scholarship. This en passant. To the book itself.

"The question of Episcopacy," says the Layman in his 9th number, "is a question of fact, to be determined by a sound interpretation of the sacred volume." We join issue with him; and not only consent, but insist, that the question shall be decided by the scripture alone. We detract not from the respect due to the primitive fathers, nor decline to meet their testimony, as we shall show in proper season. But in fixing the sense of the scripture, their authority is of no more weight with us than the authority of other uninspired men; that is, we regard not their opinion any further than as it is supported by the strength of their reasonings. The written word is the perfect and exclusive rule of our faith. It would be so, had not a shred of Christian antiquity survived the ravages of time. And if all the fathers from Barnabas to Bernard, had agreed in reckoning among the institutions of Christ, any thing which is not to be found in the statute book of his own kingdom, it should be no article of our creed; and should have no more sway in our conscience than an assertion of the Layman himself, or of his clerical friends. This being understood, let us see how the lines of evidence run.

The author of "miscellanies" had, in No. X. argued the identity of presbyters and bishops from the indiscriminate use which the scripture makes of these official terms. His antagonists flout at this argument, with all imaginable contempt, through every part of the discussion. It is "literally," say they, "good for nothing:" "too feeble to merit a serious reply." It is "wretched sophistry"—"the old and miserable sophistry of names." But wherein does the sophistry consist? Why Paul is called an "elder;" therefore the Presbyterian argument would prove that Paul was no more than a presbyter. Christ himself is called (διακονος) diaconos, which is translated a "minister," a "deacon;" therefore the Presbyterian argument would prove, that Christ was no higher than a deacon.

"Presbuteros" (πρεσβυτερος) "signifies an elder man; whence comes the term Alderman. By this new species of logic," (which, by the way, is at least more than 1400 years old,) "it might be proved," saith the Layman, "that the apostles were, to all intents and purposes, Aldermen, in the civil acceptation of the term; and that every Alderman is really and truly an Apostle." p. 52, 53.

If this argument is correct, the Presbyterians show very small, no doubt. And the Layman is not to blame for stigmatizing it as "wretched sophistry." "The miserable sophistry of names." Yet the reader may be induced to pause, when he is told that men of singular acuteness, learning, candour, penetration, and force of mind, have considered this self-same argument, when fairly stated, as altogether unanswerable. There may perhaps, be some policy in trying to run it down with hard words; for the Layman acknowledges, that the "Episcopalians would give up their cause at once, if reduced to the necessity of placing it on such a basis." p. 56. Here the secret is disclosed; if the argument from the scriptural use of official titles is valid, down goes the Hierarchy! Hinc illæ lacrymæ! No wonder that the attempts are so incessant to scowl, and scoff, and laugh it out of countenance. It will not, however, be parted with so easily; and in listening to a good word for it, the reader may begin to think it possible for a little sophistry to trill from other than Presbyterian pens.

In examining the records of the New Testament, we find that the conversion of a number of individuals to the Christian faith, was followed by their organization into a public society under their proper officers. These officers, without a single exception, are distributed into the two general classes of presbyters or bishops, and deacons: the former presiding over the spiritual, and the latter over the temporal, interests of their respective charges. This distinction is marked in the strongest manner, and is never confounded. Thus to the saints in Christ Jesus, which are at Philippi with the BISHOPS and DEACONS—a BISHOP must be blameless—likewise must the DEACONS be grave, &c.

And that the terms bishop and presbyter in their application to the first class of officers are perfectly convertible, the one pointing out the very same class of rulers with the other, is as evident as the sun "shining in his strength." Timothy was instructed by the apostle Paul in the qualities which were to be required in those who desired the office of a BISHOP.* Paul and Barnabas ordained PRESBYTERS in every church† which they had founded. Titus is directed to ordain in every city PRESBYTERS who are to be blameless, the husband of one wife. And the reason of so strict a scrutiny into character is thus rendered, for a BISHOP must be blameless.‡ If this does not identify the bishop with the presbyter, in the name of common sense, what can do it? Suppose a law, pointing out the qualifications of a sheriff were to say, a sheriff must be a man of pure character, of great activity, and resolute spirit; for it is highly necessary that a governour be of unspotted reputation, &c. the bench and bar would be rather puzzled for a construction, and would be compelled to conclude, either that something had been left out in transcribing the law; or that governour and sheriff meant the same sort of officer; or that their honours of the legislature had taken leave of their wits. The case is not a whit stronger than the case of presbyter and bishop in the Epistle to Titus. Again: Paul, when on his last journey to Jerusalem, sends for the PRESBYTERS of Ephesus to meet him at Miletum; and there enjoins these PRESBYTERS to feed the church of God over which the Holy Ghost had made them BISHOPS.‖ It appears, then, that the bishops to whom Paul refers in his instructions to Timothy, were neither more nor less than plain presbyters. To a man who has no turn to serve; no interest in perverting the obvious meaning of words; one would think that a mathematical demonstration could not carry more satisfactory evidence. But conclusive as it would be in every other case, it is in this case, the advocate of the Hierarchy tells us, "good for nothing," because Paul is called an "elder," and Christ a "deacon" as well as a "bishop," and, therefore, if the argument proves any thing, it proves that neither the apostles nor their Lord, were any higher in authority than our elders and deacons.

* 1 Tim. iii. 1. † Acts. xiv. 23. ‡ Tit. i. 5. ‖ Act. xx. 17. 28.

May we ask whether "bishop," "presbyter," "deacon," signify any thing at all as terms of office, or not? If they do not, then the scripture has used a parcel of words and names relative to church government, which are absolutely without meaning. This will not be said. Something, therefore, and something official too, they must mean. We ask again, whether or not they designate precisely any particular officers, as mayor, alderman, recorder, do in the commonwealth? Or whether, like the term magistrate, they merely express authority in general; so that no judgment can be formed from them as to the grade, or functions of the offices to which they are annexed? If the former, the assailant of the Hierarchy, its own friends being judges, is invincible, and their citadel is laid in the dust. Of course, they prefer the latter; and insist that the official title occurring in the New Testament, can afford no aid in ascertaining what offices Christ hath instituted in his church. If this is their hope, we much fear that it is a forlorn hope indeed.

If our question be not troublesome, we would ask, what is the use of names? Is it not to distinguish objects from each other? To prevent the confusion which must pervade conversation about nameless things? And to facilitate the intercourse of speech, by compressing into a single term, ideas which, without that expedient, would be protracted through descriptions of intolerable length? Now if there are not in the New Testament appropriate titles of office which distinguish the several officers from each other, there could have been no such titles in use at the time when that book was written? For it would surpass the credulity of infidels themselves, to imagine that the writers, by purposely omitting the particular, and employing only the general, terms of office, would throw both their history and their readers into utter confusion. There can be no possible reason for omitting terms characteristic of the several offices, but the fact that no such terms existed. A marvellous phenomenon this! That an immense society as the Christian church is, should be organized under its proper officers; should ramify itself through all the nations of the earth; should have every one of its branches regularly officered; and yet be destitute of names by which the officers might be correctly known; so that when an official term was mentioned, no ingenuity could guess whether an officer inspired or uninspired, ordinary or extraordinary, highest or lowest in the church, was intended!!! Did any thing like this ever happen in the affairs of men, from father Adam, down to this present A. D. 1807? Is such a fact consistent with the nature and use of human language? Is it consistent with the operations or the being of any society whatever? If the state of the primitive church with respect to terms of office, were such as the Episcopal argument represents it, she would indeed, have been a perfectly unnatural and monstrous production; dark and confused as "Chaos and old Night."

Mostrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui LUMEN ademptum;

This demonstration that the representation on the part of the Hierarchy cannot be true, accords precisely with scriptural facts. From these, therefore, we shall prove that it is not true. A controversy of moment was referred by the church at Antioch, to the apostles and elders of Jerusalem. Now, if apostle and elder are not specific terms of office, where is the propriety of the distinction? And to whom was the reference made? Would the description have answered as well if the assembly had been composed entirely of apostles; entirely of elders; or entirely of deacons? Paul and Barnabas ordained elders (presbyters) in every city. Cannot an Episcopalian tell, even from the name, whether they ordained bishops, priests, or deacons? Titus was commissioned by Paul to ordain elders in every city: and Timothy received his instructions pointing out the qualifications of men who were to be made bishops and deacons. Pray, if the officer was not precisely designated by the name, what sense was there in giving particular instructions relative to each? How were Titus and Timothy to find out what sort of officers the apostle meant? Would any Episcopalian affirm, that under cover of the indefinite terms elder, bishop, and deacon, the good evangelists might have settled down a dozen diocesans in every city? or created a score of new apostles? Why not? if apostle, bishop, presbyter, deacon, are only general terms of office, but are not appropriated to any particular orders of officers. Nay, if the Episcopal assertion on this subject is correct, a broad line of absurdity runs through the apostolic writings, and through the whole transactions of the apostolic church.

The simple truth is, that all these terms, apostle, bishop, and presbyter, and deacon, were as distinctive, and were annexed to certain officers with as much regularity and exactness, as any official terms can be at this hour. The first was given by our Lord Jesus Christ, to officers commissioned immediately by himself, for the purpose of carrying his name and establishing his church among the nations. The last, viz. deacon, was given to officers ordained by the apostles to look after the poor. The other, viz. elder, or presbyter, had long been in use as a specific term of office. It signified a ruler; but a ruler whose power was well defined, and was perfectly familiar to the Jews. Presbyters were to be found in every synagogue; and every man in the nation was acquainted with their functions. If ever there was a term which conveyed precise ideas of a particular office, and was too notorious to be mistaken, presbyter was that term. By transferring it to rulers in the Christian church, the greatest caution was taken both to prevent misconception of their authority, and to facilitate the organization of Christian societies. As there were Jews every where, and converts every where gathered from among them, there were every where a number prepared to fall, without difficulty, into a regular church connexion, and to train the Gentile believers, to whom the whole system was perfectly new. But they would have talked of elders to the day of their death, without the most distant notion of such a ruler as a diocesan bishop. These Christian presbyters were also bishops (ἐπίσκοποι.) The former word denoting their authority; the latter, the functions growing out of it. They were, according to the form in which the master had distributed their duties, to execute the office of presbyters, by taking the episcopate or oversight of the flock. So charges Paul the presbyters of Ephesus: Feed the flock of God, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you BISHOPS i. e. overseers, or inspectors. So charges Peter the presbyters of the dispersion: Feed the flock of God—taking the OVERSIGHT thereof: the word is ἐπισκοποῦντες, which signifies, "exercising the Episcopal office."

If, then, the term presbyter or elder, had been so long settled; if it denoted an officer as unlike a modern bishop as can well be conceived: and if it was admitted universally into the Christian church, as thus understood, (for there is no intimation of its sense having been changed,) then the allegation of the Hierarchy, that it is an indefinite term, signifying merely a ruler, without reference to his station, is altogether false, and the objection founded upon this allegation is altogether frivolous. On the other hand, the argument founded upon it for the identity of the scriptural bishops and presbyters as rulers in the church, to the exclusion of prelates, is solid and strong; the flings of "good for nothing," and "miserable sophistry," to the contrary notwithstanding.

We have derived some amusement from remarking, that while our Episcopal friends pertinaciously deny that any official name in the New Testament is so appropriated to a particular office as to designate the kind of officer, they cannot render their own reasoning intelligible without the aid of the very principle which they reject.

"The apostles," says the Layman, "are called presbyters. This proves conclusively that no argument can be drawn, by the advocate of parity, from the promiscuous use of the terms presbyter, bishop, in the sacred writings. If it proves that there is now but one order in the ministry, it proves equally that Paul was upon a perfect level with the elders of Ephesus."* Again, "Christ is called diaconos, which is translated deacon, or minister. Therefore Christ was on a level with the deacons of Jerusalem."

Does not every reader perceive, at the first glance, that the whole force of this objection, which is to put down the advocates of ministerial parity, depends upon the supposition, that presbyter and deacon are titles appropriated to particular grades of office? For if they are not, if they denote only office in general; what will the objection say? To try it fairly—substitute officers, in the room of elders; and the proposition will stand thus: the apostles are called elders; therefore, the apostles are on a level with officers in the church. This is not likely to fill the "advocates of parity," with any great alarm. Again,

"The apostle addresses Timothy and him alone, as the supreme governor of the church, [of Ephesus] calling upon him to see that his presbyters preach no strange doctrine."†

Here the Layman uses presbyter as a precise term, for a particular grade of officers; and so does the apostle in the epistle referred to, or else the Layman's argument, to quote his own words, "is literally good for nothing." Nay, he even concedes that the term presbuteros, elder, is "ordinarily appropriated in the New Testament, to the second grade of ministers;" although, "it is capable of being applied to all the grades."* But how we are to discover when it is applied in one way, and when in the other; i. e. when it has a particular, and when a general signification, neither this gentleman nor his reverend associates have been pleased to tell us. If we are to judge from facts, which they recommend as an excellent way of judging, and if we collect facts from their own conduct in the debate, the rule is this, Presbyter is always a DEFINITE term of office when it makes FOR the prelates, and always an INDEFINITE one, when it makes AGAINST them. For example: When Timothy is to be proved a bishop, in the genuine prelatical sense of the word, presbyter infallibly signifies the second grade of ministers. This is sober, solid logic, which no man who can put a syllogism together must venture to dispute. On the other side, when Paul, addressing these same presbyters, seems to identify them with bishops; then presbyter is nothing more than a general term of office: and the argument drawn from its being convertible with episcopos, or bishop, is "literally good for nothing," "the old and miserable sophistry of names!"

* No. 1. Collec. p. 8. † Layman, No. v. Collec. p. 55.

All this, to be sure, is vastly ingenious, and infinitely removed from sophistry and quibble! But as imagination is apt now and then to be unruly, we fancied that it is not unlike the Socinian method of defending the inspiration of the scriptures. Let those great luminaries of wisdom, Dr. Priestley and his compeers, patch up the "lame accounts" of Moses; refute the "inconclusive" reasonings of Paul; and otherwise alter and amend the Bible, as their philosophy shall dictate; and, then, the sacred writings will be inspired to some purpose! Let the abettors of prelacy interpret terms now one way, and then the contrary way, as it shall suit their convenience, and they will, no doubt, convert the New Testament into a forge for the Hierarchy, and swear in an apostle to superintend the manufacture.

* No. 1. Collec. p. 7.

But still, how are we to repel the consequence with which they press us? If presbyter and deacon are definite terms of office, and the apostles are called presbyters, and their Lord a deacon, (διακονος) we certainly, by our argument, confound all distinctions: and put the apostles, and their master too, on a level with the ordinary and even lowest officers in the church.

No such thing. The conclusion is vain, because the premises are false. The objection overlooks a distinction which its authors themselves are compelled to observe every hour of their lives; and that is, the distinction between the absolute and relative use of terms. By the absolute use of terms, we mean their being applied to certain subjects in such a manner as to sink their general sense in a particular one. By their relative use, we mean their being coupled with other terms which permit them to be understood in their general sense only. To the former class belong all names which, however general in their primary ideas, have become appropriated to particular objects. To the latter belong the innumerable applications which may be made of the very same terms, when not thus appropriated. Examples will best illustrate the distinction. Congress, judge, assembly, are terms of great latitude, and their applications may be varied without end. When we say a congress of bodies, of waters, of people—a judge of music, of sculpture, of painting—an assembly of citizens, of clergy, of delegates; all the world perceives that these terms are used in their general sense, and can be used in no other. But when we speak of the United States, and say, the congress, the judges; or of the state of New-York, and say, the judges, the assembly, all the world perceives that the terms are used in a particular sense, and designate precisely certain public officers to whom, and to whom alone, every man, woman, and child, in the country will refer them. Now supposing that certain individuals should remit a litigated point to one of the judges, and we should insist that this may mean the Lieut. Governour, because the term judge may be applied to him, when he sits in the court of errours: and suppose an opponent to urge that "judge" is an official term appropriated to known officers; and us to reply, your argument is "literally good for nothing," "the miserable sophistry of names;" judge is a generic term; and by this same mode of reasoning you might prove that every justice of the peace is on a level with the chief justice of the United States, or with God himself, because "judge" is a name given to them all!! Would not this pass for most sage ratiocination, and persuade the public, that whoever should not bow to it, must be either a "miserable" sophist, or an incorrigible dunce? And wherein it would yield the praise of acuteness, closeness, or strength, to the Episcopal objection to the argument drawn by the advocates of parity from the use of official terms in the New Testament, we are unable to discern. The mistake in both cases is the same, viz. the confounding the absolute and relative, or as we have explained it, the official and unofficial use of the same term. Make this plain distinction, and the reply of the Hierarchy is ruined. The Lord Jesus is emphatically the SENT of God; and therefore he is called, the apostle OF OUR PROFESSION.* He is also called the minister (diaconos) of THE CIRCUMCISION:† but never, absolutely, "an apostle," "a deacon." Paul and his fellow apostles are often called diaconoi, ministers; in such form as this, ministers OF GOD, ministers of THE NEW TESTA-

* Heb. iii. 1. † Rom. xv. 8.

MENT :* but never, absolutely, "deacons." They are also called elders, or presbyters; and for this very good reason, that possessing ordinary as well as extraordinary powers, they frequently participated in the councils, and exercised only the authority, of presbyters.†

Reverse the order: begin with the lowest and go up to the highest officer in the church, and you will not find an instance in which the official name of the superiour is applied to the inferiour. Deacons are no where called presbyters, nor presbyters, apostles. Cyprian does, indeed, assert, that "the apostolic authority was manifestly communicated to Epaphroditus." Where is the proof?

"St. Paul," says he, "in his epistle to the Philippians, ii. 25, calls him the apostle to the Philippians." "But I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour and fellow-soldier, but your apostle," (in our version, your messenger.) Accordingly St. Jerome observes, "by degrees, in process of time, others were ordained apostles by those whom our Lord had chosen"—as that passage to the Philippians shows. "I supposed it necessary to send unto you "Epaphroditus, your apostle." And Theodoret, upon this place, gives this reason why Epaphroditus is called the apostle to the Philippians. "He was intrusted with the Episcopal government, "as being their bishop." But these are parts of scripture on which the advocates of Episcopacy place the least reliance."‡

In this paragraph, as in many others, the asser-

* 2 Cor. vi. 4.

† This matter shall be more fully explained hereafter.

‡ CYPRIAN, No. iii. Collec. p. 72.

tions of Cyprian, applauded and adopted by Mr. H. display more haste than inquiry, and more ardour than discretion. To force a testimony in favour of Episcopacy, he has contrived, by a false translation of two words, to put into the mouth of the apostle Paul a speech which he never uttered. "St. Paul," says he, "calls Epaphroditus, the apostle to the Philippians." Paul does no such thing; he would not have spoken truth, if he had. No person, as shall be proved in its place, could be vested with apostolic authority, but by the immediate appointment of Christ himself. Such an appointment Epaphroditus had not; and, therefore, Paul did not, could not, call him "an apostle," in the official sense of that term; much less "the apostle to the Philippians;" because a permanent connexion with any particular church, like that which subsists between a presbyter and his congregation, or between a prelate and his diocese, was essentially incompatible with the apostolic character. We wonder that Cyprian, while his hand was in, did not fix down Paul himself as the diocesan of Corinth and its dependencies. For his own words to the Christians of that city are, If I be not an apostle unto others, yet doubtless I am TO YOU: *for the seal of mine apostleship are ye in the Lord. Here occurs, in a fair and honest translation, the very phrase of "an apostle to a people," which Cyprian fabricated by a gross mis-rendering of a passage in the epistle to the Philippians. And considering the anxiety with which the New Testament has been searched for prelates, there can be no doubt that if stubborn, most stubborn facts did not stand in the way, Paul would have been made up into a diocesan long ago: and introduced to our acquaintance, with the mitre on his brow, as the bishop of Corinth. But if the declaration, "I am an apostle unto you," is no proof whatever, that Paul filled an Episcopal see among the Corinthians; how can the expression, "an apostle to you," even admitting it to be correct, prove that Epaphroditus was bishop of Philippi? But the words, mangled by Cyprian into an "apostle to you,"* signify just what our common version represents them to signify, "your messenger." The Philippians had sent him with a contribution to the relief of the apostle's wants; as he himself tells us in the fourth chapter. I have all and abound: I am full; having received of Epaphroditus the things which were sent from you—v. 18. This is the reason why he is called their messenger. The coupling of the term apostolos with "your," takes it out of the predicament of official names, and requires that it be understood in its general sense, which is, "a messenger." It has nothing to do with Episcopal relations, or clerical functions of any sort; say Theodoret what he pleases. It was hardly just to found the title of a

* 1 Cor. ix. 2.

* ὑμῶν ἀπόστολος.

bishop in the murder of a text. But whatever sentence be pronounced on Theodoret, we entirely acquit Cyprian from the charge of sinning against knowledge.

Cyprian seems also to labour under the inconvenience of a bad memory. For after agreeing with his friend the Layman to reprobate all reasoning from words to things; he lays the whole stress of an argument for the prelatical dignity of Epaphroditus upon a single word. And so mighty is the force of this word in his eyes, that on the strength thereof, he says that the "Apostolic authority was manifestly communicated to Epaphroditus." When the fact turns out to be, that even the word which is to manifest this "communication," has nothing to do with the subject! And then, to finish neatly, he informs us in the close of the paragraph, that "these are parts of scripture on which the advocates of Episcopacy place the least reliance." They are wise to let the thistle alone after feeling its prickles—But it is rather incongruous to place only "the least reliance" upon "parts of scripture" which "manifestly" prove the very point they would be at. And no less so, to build their "manifest" proof upon an argument which they themselves have pronounced to be "miserable sophistry," and "literally good for nothing!"*

* These gentlemen are hardly civil to their favourite Theodoret, from whom, through Whitby and Potter, they borrowed this the right to be drowsy, in protracted toil, has become prescriptive. Homer occasionally nodded; and we shall not refuse to Cyprian and his colleagues the indulgence of a nap.

Verum operi longo fas est obrepere somnum:

The sum is, that the terms apostle, bishop, presbyter, deacon, designate, with precision, officers known and established in the apostolic church—That no two of these terms are used interchangeably, excepting "presbyter" and "bishop." We mean that apostle and bishop; apostle and presbyter; apostle and deacon; bishop and deacon; presbyter and deacon, are never put promiscuously the one for the other: And the reason is, that they do not signify the same thing. But that "bishop" and "presbyter" are used interchangeably; so that you may put the one for the other at pleasure, without destroying or obscuring the sense of the sacred writers: and the reason is, and must be, that they do signify the same thing; that is, they mark one and the same grade of ecclesiastical rulers. This last proposition, Theodoret, fierce as he was for prelacy, has himself advanced. He probably did not observe how fatal it is to the hierarchy, as the discussions on that subject were not, in his day, very deep nor general. But so sensible was Dr. Hammond, the most learned,

"manifest" communication of the apostolic authority—to hold him up with one hand as a venerable defender of their cause; and with the other to lash him as a miserable sophist.

perhaps, of all the episcopal champions, that the argument drawn by presbyterians from the identity of the scriptural bishop and presbyter, is conclusive against prelacy, that he boldly denied the existence of such officers as are now called presbyters, till about or after the death of the apostles.* In supporting this paradoxical opinion, he

* "Although this title of Πρεσβυτέροι, Elders, have been extended to a second order in the church, and is now only in use for them, under the names of Presbyters, yet in the scripture-times it belonged principally, if not alone, to bishops, there being no evidence that any of that second order were then instituted, though soon after, before the writing of Ignatius' epistles, there were such instituted in all the churches."—HAMMOND, on Act xi. 30. p. 380.

How irreconcileably all this is at war with the assertions and reasonings of other learned advocates of the hierarchy, from whom the unlearned ones necessarily copy, we may amuse ourselves with showing in a more convenient place. One or two remarks we cannot suppress. Dr. Hammond does not tell us how these presbyters came into the church, but is pretty sure that they were introduced after "the scripture times," that is, after the canon of the scripture was completed, and "before the writing of Ignatius' epistles." The Dr. then confesses that the order of presbyters as inferiour to the bishop, is not of divine right; there being no evidence that any of that second order were instituted in scripture times: consequently, that as Christ had regulated his church, bishops or presbyters, and deacons, had no intermediate officer between them. This is exactly what the presbyterians maintain, and they are much his debtor. But as he saw that their argument would ruin him, as he was utterly unable to controvert its principle, viz. the identity of the bishop and presbyter; and as he was determined not to give up the hierarchy, he had recourse to the extravagant fiction of transforming all the presbyters into Diocesans. But as Diocesans with only deacons, would constitute rather a bald hierarchy, it was requisite, to give eclat to their dignity, to foist in metamorphoses every presbyter of the apostolic church into a diocesan bishop! The meaning of language shall be inverted: the testimony of the scripture shall be dislocated: the presbyters of the city of Ephesus shall be an assemblage of diocesan bishops collected from all Asia! Truth, probability, and common sense, shall be set at naught—but the object is worth the price; the sacrifice is amply compensated, provided presbyters be banished from the New Testament, and no ruler be seen there unless in the shape of a diocesan bishop! Had only the Layman and Cyprian, and their friends, been troubled, there had been less cause of surprise. But that an argument "good for nothing;" a bit of "miserable sophistry," should put Dr. Hammond, the ὁ πανυ, the very Goliath of "the church," into such a fright as nearly to turn his brain, is strange indeed!

But should the episcopalian be worsted in the contest about the scriptural titles, what will be to another order for which three is no scriptural warrant. And thus at one stroke he has levelled with the ground the whole fabric which the other episcopal workmen have been rearing. For if Timothy and Titus were not Diocesan bishops, as the latter affirm and the Dr. denies; and if they were not metropolitans, as the Dr. affirms, the others deny, and no man living can prove; then one of their famous three orders has vanished away. Of the Dr's supposition that the presbyters were instituted before the writings of Ignatius' epistles, the reason is, that they must be found prior to that date, or else poor Ignatius must be hung up for forgery.—A notable manœuvre this to save the credit of the principal witness for the Hierarchy.

us the advantage of victory, or to him the injury of defeat, if he shall, nevertheless, establish his claim by scriptural facts? So very little, that the choice between victory and defeat, on the first ground, would not be worth a straw to either. Abstractly considered, there is no inconsistency between our own doctrine of the identity of bishops and presbyters, and the episcopal doctrine of a superiour grade. For certainly it does not follow, from the nature of the thing, that because bishop and presbyter mean the same officer, therefore there is no other officer above him. But as the facts stand, the case is widely different; and the value of the argument from the scriptural titles lies here, that this superiour order must be found among the bishops and presbyters, or not at all; because, with the exception of deacons, these were the only ordinary officers in the apostolic church. If, then, "bishop" is the same with "presbyter," the superiour or prelatical order is absolutely unknown to the official language of the New Testament. Presbyters and deacons we meet with in abundance, but not the shadow of a prelate ever crosses our path. Now, that official titles should be conferred upon every grade of officers in the church except the highest; that this officer should have no place in the official catalogue; that he should wander up and down among the churches without so much as a name; that while his subalterns are mentioned particularly and repeatedly, his own existence and dignity should be a matter of mere inference from his acts, so far surpasses all the powers of belief, that the proof of his existence is almost, if not altogether, impossible. This leads to a very short refutation of a plea on which no small "reliance" has been placed by episcopal writers, from Theodoret down to the Layman; viz. that names of office, like other words, change their signification; and become, in process of time, signs of ideas quite different from those which they originally expressed.

"In Roman history," says the Layman, "we find the term Imperator at one period applied to designate a general of an army; at another, a magistrate clothed with unlimited civil and military authority. Suppose we should be told that every general of an army was Emperor of Rome; and that the Emperor of Rome was merely general of an army; what would be the reply? That the term Imperator had changed its signification. And how would this be proved? By the Roman history, which shows us that the Emperors had generals under them, over whom they exercised authority. Apply this reasoning to the case under consideration. The terms bishop, presbyter, are used promiscuously in the New Testament. Therefore, say the advocates of parity, they designated the same office in the ages subsequent to the apostles. Is this a logical conclusion? Surely not. Names change their signification. Ecclesiastical history tells us, and the most learned advocates of parity have admitted the fact, that the order of bishops existed in the church as distinct from, and superiour to, the order of presbyters, within forty or fifty years after the last of the apostles. The bishops then had presbyters under them, over whom they exercised authority. The offices were distinct from the beginning, bishops being the successors, not of those who are promiscuously called bishops, presbyters, elders, in the New Testament, but of the apostles themselves. Theodoret tells us expressly, "that in the process of time those who succeeded to the apostolic office, left the name of apostle to the apostles, strictly so called, and gave the name of bishop to those who succeeded to the apostolic office." No argument, then, can be founded on the promiscuous use of names."*

We hardly expected to find the Layman advancing and retracting a doctrine in the compass of a single page. Yet, assuredly, if bishops are not the successors of those who are promiscuously called bishops and presbyters, then these names do designate a precise order of officers, which was the very thing the Layman had denied in the preceding paragraph. That names change their signification is no new discovery. But can this either help the hierarchy, or hurt the advocates of parity? Things are before names; and the changes in things before changes in names. If, therefore, a change has passed upon the signification of official names in the church, since the days of the apostles, that alone proves to a demonstration, that a change has also passed upon the offices themselves; which consequently are not as the apostles left them. This is exactly what the presbyterians maintain; and so the episcopal plea returns with all its force upon its authors, and fastens upon their hierarchy the charge of having departed from, and corrupted, the order which Christ appointed for his church, and which the death of his apostles sealed up for permanency. We are not ignorant that the prelatical writers attribute this change of names to a very different cause. The celebrated Dr. Bentley, who, in critical learning, in spirit, and fire, surpasses the most of them, and falls short of none, thinks it was the modesty of the prelates* which induced them to relinquish the name of apostle, and to assume that of bishop. It is hard to estimate the degree of modesty which pervaded an immensely numerous body of prelates† at a period of which we have scarcely any records. The epistles of their tutelar saint, Ignatius, do not abound with that lovely virtue; and all the world is witness, that in matters relating to their titles and power, the order has been entirely innocent of such an imputation for fourteen centuries at least. The apostles themselves decorated the prelates, we are told, with their own name and ordinary dignity; they exercised the authority and wore the name, during the life, and in the presence of the apostles; and after their death retained the dignity, but renounced the appellation out of pure modesty! Dr. Hammond has more regard to consistency. He first creates, after the death of the apostles, an inferiour order of clergy; and as they could not well do without a name, he very ingeniously splits up the designation of the pre-existing order, giving one half to the prelates, and the other to his new race of officers!

* Layman, No. 1. Collec. p. 8. 9.

* Phileleutherus Lipsiensis, p. 186.

† Dr. HAMMOND says there were twenty-four, besides the metropolitan, in Judea alone. Annot. on Rev. iv. 4.

We repeat, that change of names pre-supposes change of things. This is the natural and necessary course of language. The contrary would reverse the operations of the human mind. When the change was introduced, is perfectly immaterial to the argument. When the last of the apostles breathed out his spirit, the authority of the living God "bound up the testimony, and sealed the law among his disciples." No additions nor diminutions now. And whether the alteration in the government of the church, which produced a corresponding alteration in the names of her officers, took place "forty years," or forty score of years, or forty hours after the decease of the apostles, is not, with regard to the rule of conscience, worth the trouble of a question. The advocates of parity, do not, as the Layman affirms, infer from the promiscuous use of the terms bishop and presbyter in the New Testament, "that they designated the same office in the ages subsequent to the apostles." It is of no importance to them, what these terms signified in after ages. They prove that these terms signify in the New Testament, one and the same order of rulers; and therefore insist, that, as the rule of faith and the sense of the scripture are immutable, the same terms must mean, at this hour, the very same thing which they meant as they dropped from the pen of an apostle. This is enough for them, as they entertain no fear of being unable to demonstrate that the scriptural presbyters are not diocesan bishops; and are the only ordinary rulers which the New Testament, the statute book of Christ's kingdom, recognizes as of his institution. The subsequent change of sense in the scriptural titles, as we have more than once observed, proves decisively a change in the original order of the church: for upon no other principle can the other change be explained. The Layman has been peculiarly unhappy, in forcing it upon the notice of his readers. He has only turned "king's evidence," against his party; and, in attempting to parry a Presbyterian thrust, has unwittingly smitten his own bishop under the fifth rib.

The advocates for the Hierarchy labour hard to show that any argument from official names to the offices designated in the New Testament, is inconclusive. They even pronounce it "good for nothing." Their hope is to render the scripture, thus far, neutral; that if it bear no testimony for them, it shall bear none against them. Whether they have succeeded in this attempt or not, we leave to the dispassionate judgment of the reader, who, with a desire of perceiving and embracing the truth, has deliberately considered what we have already written.

We now follow them to their argument from the scriptural facts, upon which they avowedly rest the weight of their cause.

The first of these facts is the triple order of the priesthood among the Jews.

"We find," says the Layman, "three orders of officers in the Jewish church; and, in the Christian, there have always been three orders answering to these. What Aaron, his sons, and the Levites were in the temple, that bishops, priests, and deacons are in the Church. Such is the concurring testimony of the primitive fathers. Take that of St. Jerome, whom the advocates of parity are fond of quoting, and to whom, therefore, it is presumed, they will not object. "That we may know the apostolical economy to be taken from the pattern of the Old Testament, the same that Aaron, and his sons, and the Levites, were in the temple, the bishops, presbyters, and deacons, are in the church of Christ." It is too absurd to attempt to turn this parallel into ridicule. By the very same mode of proceeding you may destroy the whole Christian dispensation. In all that he has said upon this point, the miscellaneous writer has contributed much more to the support of infidelity than of any other cause.

"How far, then, do we carry this argument?

"We say, simply, that the law being figurative of the gospel, in all its important parts, the Jewish priesthood was, of course, typical of the Christian. For this we have the express declaration of the apostle Paul, and the advocates of parity will not pretend to controvert the position. Well, then, the priest of the law serving as "the example and shadow of heavenly things," the circumstance of there being three orders in the Jewish ministry, furnishes a strong presumption against the doctrine of parity. We do not rely upon this as proof. We merely state it as presumptive evidence, entitled to real attention. It gives us, we contend, possession of the ground, and throws the burden of proof upon our opponents.

"Now, what says the miscellaneous writer in reply to all this? He talks to us of the dress of the Jewish high priests; asking, very sagaciously, where are the golden ephod, the breast plate, the embroidered girdle, in which Aaron and his successors were clad. I call upon him here to lay his hand upon his heart, and say, whether this is just reasoning. He knows it is not. What, the Jewish priesthood not figurative of the Christian, because of a variety in dress! Is it necessary, in order that one thing be typical of another, that there should be no points of difference between them? No more than it is necessary that we should be able to rise to the perfection of the character of Christ, because we are called upon to propose him as the model for imitation, and to become holy as he is holy.

"Is the miscellaneous writer aware of the conclusion to which his mode of reasoning conducts? If he has proved that the Jewish priesthood was not typical of the Christian, he has proved, equally, that the law was not a shadow of the gospel; thus destroying, effectually, all connexion between the Old and New Testament. Is there no difference between our Saviour and the Paschal Lamb by which he was prefigured? Abraham, Moses, Joshua, David, were all types of Christ; but were there no points of distinction between these men and the Saviour of the world? Give to the infidel the weapons of this writer, and how easily will he demolish, with them, the whole fabric of Christianity! If the points of difference which have been mentioned, between the priesthood of the law, and of the gospel, prove that the one was not typical of the other, they equally prove that our Saviour was never prefigured, and that that intimate connexion, between the Jewish and Christian dispensations, which has been so much relied upon by the defenders of the faith, never existed but in the imagination of men. But I feel as if I were insulting the understanding of the reader, in dwelling on this point. I dismiss it, therefore, especially as I have not been able to bring myself to believe that the writer had any thing more in view, in it, than a flourish of rhetoric to attract the vulgar gaze.

"The Mosaic dispensation, then, was figurative of the Christian. The priesthood of the law was typical of the priesthood of the gospel. The former consisting of distinct and subordinate orders, a strong presumption thence arises in favour of that distinction and subordination of office which, until the days of Calvin, characterized, without a single exception, the Christian church. This we contend, as was said before, gives us possession of the ground, and throws the burden of proof upon the advocates of parity.

"So much then for the Jewish priesthood. It was a shadow of the Christian priesthood, according to the express declaration of the apostle Paul. While the miscellaneous writer does not venture openly to deny this, but rather seems to admit it, in representing the whole Jewish system as typical, he endeavours, nevertheless, in an indirect manner, to destroy all relationship between the priesthood of the law and of the gospel, by dwelling on the variety of dress, with some other subordinate points of distinction. Here he acts with his usual imprudence; tearing up, in his rage, against Episcopacy, the very foundation of the Christian faith."*

The same analogy is thus traced by Cyprian:

"Why should not the orders of the priesthood under the old economy be supposed to typify those orders that were to be established under the new? Besides, the fact is, that the Christian dispensation was not so much the abolition, as it was the fulfilment of the Jewish. Christ came, not to destroy, but to fulfil the law and the prophets.

"It is true, indeed, we possess not the Jewish form of church government. We possess one, however, which is the consummation of the Jewish—a government of which the Jewish was an imperfect image. We possess a priesthood more glorious than the Levitical, inasmuch as it ministers under a more glorious dispensation—inasmuch as it performs purer and more exalted offices—inasmuch as, in its nature and offices, it is the glorious substance which was only faintly shadowed out under the law.

* No. VIII. Collec. p. 110, 111.

"We think, therefore, that we stand on substantial ground when we maintain that we derive a strong argument in demonstration of the divine origin of our form of church government, by showing that on this point the new dispensation is made to correspond with the old; is made the true substance of which the old was the shadow. What the high priests, the priests, and the Levites, were in the temple, such are the bishops, the presbyters, and deacons, in the church of Christ. This is the uniform language of the fathers. This is the conclusion to which the data afforded us by the apostles inevitably lead.

"Such was the model of church government instituted by God himself, and intended to be transmitted through all ages, with modifications that should vary, no doubt, according to the varying circumstances of mankind; provided these modifications affected not its great and cardinal principles. We say that the Jewish priesthood was the image of the Christian. We say that it is sound reasoning to deduce the probable form of the substance from the lineaments of it that may be traced in its image."*

It is somewhat curious to observe the rapid growth of this argument from the Jewish to the Episcopal priesthood. With the Layman it is not proof; it is merely "presumptive evidence, entitled to real attention." By the time it has travelled to Cyprian, it is a "strong argument in demonstration of the divine origin of their form of church government;" and it places them, as well it may, "on substantial ground." But while we are looking through Cyprian's magnifier, at this Jewish image of the "Christian priesthood," he suddenly shifts his glass, and the giant, DEMONSTRATION, dwindles down again into the dwarf, PROBABILITY. "We say," adds he, in the next paragraph, "that it is sound reasoning to deduce the probable form of the substance from the lineaments of it that may be traced in its image." One hardly knows what to do with writers who drive their argument backwards and forwards between "proof" and "presumption;" between "probability" and "demonstration;" as if a rational debate were a game at shuttlecock! But they are not without excuse; for to one who can see the tendency of this argument of theirs, it is pretty clear that they did not know what to do with themselves. For if, as they assure us, the Jewish was a type of the Christian priesthood—if the former was "a shadow," and a "faint shadow," of which the latter is the true and "glorious substance," then there must be a coincidence between the essential parts of the type, and the essential parts of the thing typified. But according to the divine institution, the three orders of the high priest, the priests, and Levites, were essential to the legal priesthood; and if this was typical of the evangelical "priesthood," there must of necessity be three orders in that also. If it were not so, the type would not tally with the antitype, the image would not represent its object, and the end of the typical system would be defeated. A body with a head would as soon cast a shadow without one, as a type of three orders represent a reality of two, five, or seven. This reasoning supposes, that the number of orders enters into the nature of the type; and on the same supposition rests the Episcopal argument. For if the number of orders in the Jewish priesthood constituted no part of the type, it is extreme weakness to mistake it for a "demonstration," or even a "presumption," that there ought to be three orders in the thing typified. It is producing your type to prove that the thing typified possesses a property which the type does not exhibit. The fallacy is too obvious to impose upon a child.

* No. VIII. Collec. p. 119, 120.

On the other hand, if the number of orders in the Jewish priesthood makes a part of the type, and the Christian ministry is the thing typified, the conclusion is inevitable, that there must be three orders in the Christian ministry. If such a typical relation really exists between the ministry of the old and of the new economy, we will lay down our pen. Our cause is desperate; the hierarchy has triumphed, but not a Protestant hierarchy. For according to all the laws of typical analogy, it is not more necessary that there be three orders in the "Christian priesthood," than that the highest order be confined to a single person. In this point the Jewish and the Episcopal priesthood differ essentially. There is no likeness between the type and the antitype. Who, that intended to institute a set of resemblances, would ever dream of appointing a numerous body of Levites to represent a numerous body of deacons; a numerous body of priests to represent another numerous body of priests; and then finish by putting at the head of his system a single high priest, to represent an order of ten thousand bishops? Nay, if the Episcopal argument here is sound, it concludes much more forcibly in favour of the Papal than of the Protestant hierarchy. The former preserves, in her single pontiff, an essential feature of the type, which the latter, by her order of bishops, has perfectly obliterated. Thus, then, the case stands; if the typical character of the Jewish priesthood does not include its orders, the Episcopal inference from them in behalf of the bishops, priests, and deacons, is palpably false: If it does, while the Presbyterian perishes, the church of Rome gains much more than the church of England.

But this notion of the typical property of the grades of priesthood in the Jewish church, is an Episcopal fiction. It has no real existence. The decisive proof is, that the Levitical priesthood typified our Lord Jesus Christ, in whom there could be no place for different orders. Its several grades, as such, had nothing to do with its typical character and functions. These lay in another direction altogether.

We, therefore, advance a step higher, and deny the whole doctrine of the hierarchy, in so far as it makes the Jewish priesthood a type of the Christian ministry. The Layman has asserted that "the law being figurative of the gospel, in all its important parts, the Jewish priesthood was, of course, typical of the Christian."* To the same purpose Cyprian, "We say that the Jewish priesthood was the image of the Christian."† These are the assertions; now for the proof. Cyprian tells us, that it "is the uniform language of the fathers—the conclusion to which the data afforded us by the apostles inevitably lead." The Layman, that "for this," viz. that the "Jewish priesthood was typical of the Christian, we have the express declaration of the apostle Paul," and that "the advocates of parity will not pretend to controvert the position." But they certainly do, sir; confident as you are of the negative. They not only venture to controvert, but engage to refute, your position. They maintain that the apostles have not afforded any data which can lead to such a conclusion. Cyprian has mentioned none: and the only passage which the other has quoted in his own justification, he has misunderstood and misapplied. The considerations which make against them, are numerous and weighty.

* No. VIII. Collec. p. 310. † No. IV. Collec. p. 320.

1. The scriptures no where draw a parallel or comparison between the rank and functions of the ministry of the Old Testament and that of the New. And if the former was designed to be the model of the latter, the omission is altogether unaccountable. They neither say nor insinuate that the priests under the law were a type and image of which the truth and substance are to be sought in the ministers of the new dispensation. The nature and use of the legal institutions are explained with minute accuracy by the Apostle Paul, in his epistle to the Hebrews. He treats them as types of "Jesus Christ, and all the effects of his mediation in grace and glory;" but of their typical relation to the Christian ministry, not a single syllable.

Here the Layman interrupts us with "the express declaration of the apostle Paul." Let us have it. "The priests of the law serving as 'the example and shadow of heavenly things,' the circumstance of there being three orders in the Jewish ministry furnishes a strong presumption against the doctrine of parity."* The "express declaration" of the apostle, it seems is, that "the priests of the law serve as the example and shadow of heavenly things;"† representing his meaning to be, that the priests of the law are that example and shadow. We have a small objection to this assertion of the Layman; and that is, that, like Cyprian's story of bishop Epaphroditus, it puts into the mouth of the apostle a speech which he never uttered. There is neither in the passage quoted, nor in any other passage of the epistle to the Hebrews, nor in the whole New Testament, such a declaration as the Layman ascribes to Paul. He has either quoted from memory, which we suspect to be the fact, and so has forgotten what the apostle said; or else is as unlucky in his criticism as his poor friend Cyprian. The apostle says, "the priests who offer gifts according to the law, serve," not AS, but "UNTO the example and shadow of heavenly things." It was not the priests, but the things to which they ministered, that constituted the "example and shadow." This is obvious upon the first inspection of the text.* The apostle is discoursing of the tabernacle, its furniture and service. These were the "example and shadow." The substance, the "heavenly things," was Christ Jesus, his sacrifice and intercession, with all their blessed effects in the salvation of men. This is the apostle's own interpretation. For these same priests whom he here describes as "serving unto the example and shadow of heavenly things," he elsewhere describes as "serving the tabernacle."† The tabernacle, therefore, not the priests, were the "example and shadow of the heavenly things." And that this is the apostle's meaning, is "yet far more evident." For in the 9th chapter, after detailing the construction, the furniture, and the service of the tabernacle,* he says that this tabernacle, thus framed, equipped, and attended, was a figure for the time then present.† "But Christ being come," proceeds the apostle, "an high priest of good things to come, by (through) a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building: neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood, he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us."

* No. viii. Collec. p. 110. † P. 111.

* Οιτινες ὑποδειγματι και σκια λατρευουσι των επουρανιων. Heb. viii. 5.

† Οἱ τῃ σκηνῃ λατρευοντες. Heb. xiii. 10.

This "greater and more perfect tabernacle," is the human nature of the Son of God, in virtue of the once offering up of which as a sacrifice for sin, he entered into heaven itself for us. It is this blood of his, typified by the "blood of goats and calves," which "purges our conscience from dead works to serve the living God." These are the "good things to come;" these "the heavenly things," of which the first tabernacle was the "example and shadow." The "Christian priesthood," as it is improperly and offensively termed, does not even appear in the comparison. If the Layman has discovered it among the "heavenly things," his penetration is acute indeed. Instead, therefore, of producing an "express declaration" of the apostle to support his doctrine, he has only put a text to needless torture; for his witness, like Cyprian's in the affair of Epaphroditus, knows nothing of the matter.

* Heb. xiii. v. 2—7. † v. 9.

It is further worthy of notice, that the New Testament never applies to the Christian ministry those terms which express the office of a priest, and which were invariably applied to the priesthood of the law. Jesus Christ is called a priest, an high priest, a great high priest; but not his ministers. On the principle that he is the true priest whom the priests of the law prefigured, this is perfectly natural. But is it not inconceivable, that the appropriate title of the priesthood should be given to the typical priests; to the form—to the shadow—and uniformly withheld from the priests who are the substance represented by them? Why this change of language? If the priestly character, office, and work, have been fulfilled in our Lord Jesus Christ, and if he, as the sole priest of the church, is now appearing in heaven for us, the reason of the change is as clear as noon day. There are no more official priests, there is no more "priesthood," in the church upon earth; and therefore the name is laid aside. But if there are such priests and priesthood, and if these are the very substance of which the old priests were but a shadow, it will baffle all the ingenuity of the hierarchy to the end of time, to assign even a tolerable reason why the spirit of wisdom has refused them their official designation, and has altered the whole official style of the church! The ministry under the new dispensation is represented as the ascension gift of our glorified master.* Ordinary and extraordinary officers are enumerated, but not a word of the Jewish orders being a type of the Christian ministry. Not a word of priests or priesthood, of altars, of sacrifices, or any of the sacrificial language to which the hierarchy is so devoted. She has thought fit, and she shall answer for it, to bring back and affix to her clergy and their functions; to her sacramental table and its elements, a set of denominations which the Holy Ghost not only never annexed to the ministry and ordinances of his own creation; but which he had, with pointed care, excluded from the New Testament!

Our assertion, therefore, stands firm, that the apostolic writings furnish no data which can lead us to the "conclusion" of Cyprian, or the "position" of the Layman. Whence, we again ask, whence this silence? Why is so important a property of the typical priesthood overlooked? Is not the "glorious substance," of which it was only a "faint shadow," so much as worthy of notice? and that too in a set treatise of the legal shadows and their corresponding substances? It is indisputable, their own words evince it, that if the Layman and Cyprian, and their several coadjutors, had prepared such a treatise; whatever place they might have allotted to the "apostle and high priest of our profession," the dignity of the episcopal priesthood would have filled up one of their most animated chapters. Having found so much of their own image where Paul found so little, it is but right to supply his deficiencies, and to administer a delicate rebuke for his negligent exposition!

* Eph. iv. 11.

2. A comparison of the Levitical with the Episcopal priesthood, will demonstrate that the former was not, and could not be, a type of the latter.

The grades are ranged thus:

Type, or Shadow,	Antitype, or Substance.
High-priest, - - - -	Bishop,
Priest, - - - -	Priest,
Levite, - - - -	Deacon.

Now in what do they resemble each other?

Did the high priest ordain the priests? No. Did he confirm the people? No. Had he the exclusive right of government? No. On the other hand; Do the bishops discharge any duty analogous to the offering up of the yearly sacrifice on the great day of expiation? No. Have they the peculiar privilege of entering into the immediate presence of God? No. Is the oracle of God attached to their persons? or have they any special right of declaring the divine will? No. He who has sagacity enough to detect in the appropriate functions of the high priest any thing that deserves to be called a type of the functions appropriated to a Christian bishop, can never be at a loss for type and antitype, so long as any two objects remain within the bible or without it. Their prerogatives and offices are so absolutely dissimilar, that to make the one an image of the other, is to pour overwhelming ridicule upon the whole system of typical ordinances. The success will not be much better, if we go down to the second and third grades of the priesthood. If the reader has an hour which he cannot employ more profitably, he may throw it away in hunting for likenesses between the priests of the law and of the gospel; between the Levite and the Episcopal deacon. We have enough of it. Our argument is this, that as typical officers must have typical functions, if the functions of the legal priesthood did not typify those of the Christian, then was not the one priesthood a type of the other. To insist upon a typical meaning in the number of orders, and to discard as mere circumstances, the respective functions of those orders, is a distinction which reason laughs at, and a sound head will hardly adopt.

3. As typical officers and typical functions are correlate ideas, the former necessarily implying the latter, we remark, that if the Jewish priesthood prefigured the Christian ministry, as a type its antitype, then it follows, that we have in the functions of the priesthood now, the substance of that which in the functions of the Levitical priesthood was only a type. That is, the priests now offer up the true sacrifice for sin, and are our mediators and intercessors with God, upon the footing of their sacrifice. It cannot be doubted that the priestly office of old was typical; and its sacrifices typical. Whoever, then, is the real priest, offers the real sacrifice. But he is the real priest of whom the priests of the law were a type. And the priests of the law were a type, says the hierarchy, of our priesthood: therefore the priesthood of the hierarchy offer up the true sacrifice for sin! There is no getting rid of the conclusion. The apostle Paul reasons in the same manner, from the typical relation of the old priests and their sacrifices to Jesus Christ and his sacrifice. He insists, that because they were shadows and Christ the substance, therefore Christ, the true priest, has put away sin by the offering up of himself as the true sacrifice. We see that the doctrine of the hierarchy is irreconcileable with that of the apostle. He teaches that the Levitical priesthood and their offerings were typical of Jesus Christ and his offerings. The hierarchy teaches that the Levitical priesthood typified the evangelical ministry. Both cannot be true. The same type cannot signify a single high priest who offered up a true and proper sacrifice for sin, and an order of priests who offer up no such sacrifice. If Christ is the substance of the legal priesthood, the Episcopal hierarchy is not. If that hierarchy is the substance, Jesus Christ is not. The reader has his choice, whether he will side with the hierarchy at the expense of the apostle, or with the apostle at the expense of the hierarchy! Whether he will look for the substance of the Levitical priesthood in the Son of God and his mediatorial work, or in the administration of the Episcopal clergy! Whether—But we check ourselves. A stranger instance of infatuated zeal has rarely occurred. The genius of the Old Testament types shall be perverted; their beautiful correspondence with their objects shall be marred; the principle of a whole book of the New Testament, (the Epistle to the Hebrews,) shall be set aside; but an argument, though merely a presumptive one, for the hierarchy, shall not be given up!

The only escape from this dilemma appears to be through a distinction between the particular character of the Old Testament priests as such, and their general character as ministers of religion. It may be yielded, that in the former they were types of Christ; and maintained that in the latter they were types of the Christian ministry. The distinction is of no avail; and its best effect is to protract the death of the Episcopal plea for a minute longer. If both their particular character as priests, and their general character as ministers of religion were typical, they were nothing but types. The worship which they offered up was typical worship; their prayers were typical prayers; their instructions to the people, typical instructions. The church in which they ministered was a typical church. All was type. There was no reality. But this is absurd. God had as real a church, and dispensed as real blessings, by real ministers before, as since, the evangelical dispensation. Whatever typical ordinances might be set up, the church itself never was a type. It is a whole, and one part of a whole cannot be a type of another part. And as there were real ministers in a real church under the law, if you will have them to be types in their general character, you make the ministry of the church at one period and in one form, the type of her ministry at another period under another form. This is a contradiction. For the same persons could not be, at the same time, and in the exercise of the same functions, under the same relations, both shadow and substance. It destroys also the nature of the church of God; giving us all type before the new dispensation, and all substance after it. So that in fact, according to the scheme we are considering, there was no such thing as a church at all under the law, but only the shadow of a church. We have one step further in this typical climax. The sinners under the law were only typical sinners; the saints only typical saints; the salvation of the soul only a typical salvation; and for aught we can see, the God of salvation only a typical God!

View it in any light you choose: The doctrine of the Layman, Cyprian, &c. concerning the Old Testament types, is inconsistent with itself; with the doctrine of the apostle Paul, and with all the known relations of type and antitype. Yet while they are spreading this confusion; while they are displaying the most absolute want of acquaintance with both the Old Testament and the New, they have the assurance to tell us that if we "have proved that the Jewish priesthood was not typical of the Christian, we have proved equally that the law was not a shadow of the gospel: thus destroying effectually, all connexion between the Old Testament and the New."* It seems, then, that although we have Christ the true priest and true sacrifice; and the effects of his mediation in pardoning sin, in purging the conscience, and in presenting an efficacious intercession before God in the highest heavens—we have nothing to the purpose; we are "destroying the whole Christian dispensation;" we are doing "much more to the support of infidelity, than of any other cause;"† we are tearing up the very foundations of the Christian faith"—Why?—because we will not admit the episcopal clergy to be the substance of which the Levitical priesthood was only the shadow! It is amazing, it is humiliating, that men who have need that one teach them which be the first principles of the oracles of God, should talk so confidently. Nay, in the very act of sanctioning all this misconception, misconstruction, and wresting of the scriptures, Mr. H. has permitted himself to ask Dr. Linn, whether he is "really ignorant of the nature of the types of scripture," or whether he is "guilty of wilful misrepresentation?"* Such questions as these ought not to have been put by Mr. Hobart.

* Layman, No. viii. p. 110. † P. 110.

So much for the first fact to which the disputants for the hierarchy have appealed.

Their second fact, is the triple order of the "priesthood" during our Lord's personal converse with men.

"Whilst our Saviour remained on earth," (says Cyprian,) "he, of course, held supreme authority in his church. The twelve were appointed by him as his subordinate officers. The seventy disciples constituted a still lower order. There existed, then, in the church of Christ, at this time, three distinct grades of ministers. When our Lord ascended into heaven, when he breathed upon the twelve, and said, "As my father hath sent me, so send I you," he transmitted to them the same authority which he himself had retained during his continuance amongst them: the twelve commissioned their presbyters and deacons to aid them in the administration of ecclesiastical government. Before their death they constituted an order of ministers to whom they conveyed that supreme authority in the church which was lodged in their hands during their lives."†

Thus, also, the Layman:

"Jesus Christ commissioned twelve, and the seventy; but he gave them no authority to commission others. The high power of ordination was exercised by himself alone. Here, then, were three orders; our Saviour, the great head of the church; the twelve apostles; and the seventy disciples."*

* Note to Collec. p. 37. † CYPRIAN, No. II. Collec. p. 62.

We should be much entertained, and possibly edified, by the history of the three orders and their succession, as compiled by the Layman and his learned colleague, were we not disturbed by some difficulties which we cannot well remove.

Our first difficulty, as to this second stage of the triple order, relates to John the Baptist. He was certainly the Redeemer's messenger, and exercised a contemporary ministry. Why is he left out of the list? His extraordinary functions cannot be the reason; for those of his master were more extraordinary than his own. But he was neither the Christ, nor one of the twelve, nor one of the seventy. If you take him into the catalogue, you have four orders; if you leave him out, you must leave out his master likewise; and then you will have but two. In either way the history of the hierarchy sticks.

Our next difficulty relates to the co-existence of the Jewish and Christian priesthoods. The church of God was either organized under the Christian form, during our Lord's continuance upon earth, or not. If not, there was no Christian priesthood, and consequently no orders of priesthood. If she was, then did she actually subsist under two forms at the same time. For it is certain that the legal form remained, till the offering up of the "word made flesh," in sacrifice for sin. Moreover, our Lord Jesus Christ was indubitably the head of the church under her Jewish form. She was, with her whole system of worship, his property. *He came unto his own. He was in the temple, the lord of the temple, and acted as such. Now if his personal presence as the head of the church made him an order in her evangelical ministry, that same presence in the Jewish church made him one of the orders of the Jewish priesthood. Admit this, and we are troubled with an additional order in that priesthood; deny it, and we have lost one of the Christian orders. The former compels us to take four, the latter allows us but two. Scylla and Charybdis over again for the history of the three orders!

* Layman, No. IX. Collec. p. 153.

Our third difficulty relates to the principle upon which, in the present case, the triple order is founded. The Layman and Cyprian, as a shoal of other writers had done before them, work up the apostles and seventy disciples into two orders of priesthood; and that their canonical number might not be wanting, they complete it by adding the Redeemer himself!

Now, we had always thought, with the apostle Paul, that Christ was faithful as a son over his own house: that the church itself is the house; and that all the ministers of the church are his servants. It was really a stroke worthy of "giants in theology," to make the Lord himself one of the orders among his own servants! And seeing that his assent into heaven never stript him of any relation to his church, and that he actually exercises the priestly office at this moment before the throne of God, the consequence is, either that there are now four orders of the priesthood, or that there were but two in the days of his flesh. The same perplexity stares the hierarchy once more in the face; and if she will have three orders, neither more nor less, she must depose her master in order to make way for her bishops!

* Εις τα ΙΔΙΑ ηλθε. John i. 11.

Our fourth difficulty relates to the nature of the succession.

Christ transmitted to the twelve, says Cyprian, "the same authority which he himself had retained during his continuance among them; and the twelve commissioned their presbyters and deacons to aid them in the administration of ecclesiastical government," and "before their death, constituted an order of ministers to whom they conveyed" their own "supreme authority."

Some how or other, we have lost the seventy disciples in this arrangement. Probably they were promoted to bishopricks. However that be, the descent of "power" is very distinctly stated. Christ conveyed the same authority which he himself exercised to the apostles; and the apostles conveyed the same authority which they exercised to the order which they constituted before their death; that is, the order of bishops. So, then, the order of bishops have now the very same authority which Christ himself had when he was upon earth! But Christ was the "lord and master" of the church; so are the Bishops; and for that reason are very properly styled, in some places, Lords bishops! Christ was the proprietor of the church—so are the bishops, no doubt! Christ had authority to appoint sacraments and to mould the government of his church according to his pleasure: so have the bishops, beyond controversy! It seems, then, that they are the successours not so much of the apostles, as of the Lord Jesus Christ himself: that he is gone away to heaven, and has deputed to them in solidum, by the lump, the whole authority which he himself possessed! A fair inheritance we own; and very goodly heirs! Having established this point, we wonder that they put themselves to any further trouble in making out their title to "the pre-eminence!" There is a short cut to the resolution of every difficulty about the affairs of the church, and every thing else. Go to the bishops! Christ had unlimited authority over the conscience, and they have succeeded him. Ecclesiastical history is not barren of instances wherein they have acted up to the spirit of their trust. England can witness, that, in one day, they threw upon the mercy of the persecutor, and the comforts of famine, two thousand of the best men and the most glorious ministers of the gospel, that ever blessed a nation or adorned a church: and a great proportion of them for not submitting to impositions upon conscience for which the warrant of the divine word was not so much as pretended. But the Episcopal warrant was perfectly clear: and the Puritans were righteously deprived for not bowing to the successours of Jesus Christ! "Come set us the five mile act to music."* Let us compensate the fast of the 30th January for the martyrdom of Charles,† with the festival of St. Bartholomew's,‡ for the judgment of the Presbyterians!

* An act of 17th Charles II. by which non-conformist ministers were prohibited, unless in crossing the road, to come or be, on any pretence whatever, after March 24th, 1665, within five miles of any city, town corporate, or borough that sent burgesses to parliament; or within five miles of any parish, town, or place, wherein they had, since the act of oblivion, been parson, vicar, or lecturer, &c.; or where they had preached in any conventicle.

† Charles I. of tyrannical memory, was beheaded on the 30th January, 1649. He called himself, and was called by some others, a martyr. The anniversary of his martyrdom has afforded the High church clergy many fine opportunities for displaying their zeal for "the church," and mourning over her calamities.

‡ The famous "Act for the uniformity of public prayers and administration of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies, &c., in the church of England;" which received the royal assent on the 19th May, 1662, and took effect on the 24th of August following, being St. Bartholomew's day. Assent and consent to its provisions were to be declared by that day, on pain of deprivation of their livings, if the offenders were in the ministry; and if schoolmasters or tutors, three months imprisonment and a fine of five pounds sterling. About two thousand ministers could not, with a good conscience, comply; and they were deprived accordingly.

They who can persuade themselves that the Episcopal prelates enjoy the same power, which was vested in our Lord Jesus Christ, are welcome to their consolation. We are, as yet, a great ways off from the line of converts.

Our fifth difficulty relates to the question, whether the twelve were really a superiour order to the seventy? We cannot perceive in the New Testament any characters of such superiority. On comparing the history of their appointment, we find their commission was the same both in form and in substance; that they had the same powers, the same instructions, the same cautions, the same support; in short, that their whole mission was the same. Let any man of common candour read the account of it in Matthew and Luke; and let him discover, if he can, any thing that bears the semblance of a superiour and inferiour order. To facilitate his inquiry we subjoin the passages alluded to—

The TWELVE:

Matthew ix. 37—x. 16.

"Then saith he unto his disciples, The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth labourers into his harvest. And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples, he gave them power

The SEVENTY:

Luke x. 1—16.

"After these things the Lord appointed other seventy also, and sent them two and two before his face into every city and place whither he himself would come. Therefore said he unto them, The harvest truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore, the

The TWELVE.

against unclean spirits, to cast them out; and to heal all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease. Now the names of the twelve apostles are these; the first, Simon, who is called Peter, and Andrew his brother; James the son of Zebedee, and John his brother; Philip and Bartholomew; Thomas and Matthew the publican; James the son of Alpheus, and Lebbeus, whose surname was Thaddeus. Simon the Canaanite, and Judas Iscariot who also betrayed him. These twelve Jesus sent forth, and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not: but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And, as ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils; freely ye have received, freely give. Provide neither gold, nor silver, nor brass, in your purses; nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; for the workman is worthy of his meat. And into whatsoever city or town ye shall enter, inquire who in it is worthy; and there

The SEVENTY.

Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest. Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves. Carry neither purse, nor scrip, nor shoes: and salute no man by the way. And into whatsoever house ye enter, first say, Peace be to this house. And if the son of peace be there, your peace shall rest upon it: if not, it shall turn to you again. And in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give: for the labourer is worthy of his hire. Go not from house to house. And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you, eat such things as are set before you; and heal the sick that are therein; and say unto them, The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But into whatsoever city ye enter, and they receive you not, go your ways out into the streets of the same, and say, Even the very dust of your city, which cleaveth on us, we do wipe off against you: notwithstanding, be ye sure of this, that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you. But I say unto you, That it shall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for that city. Wo unto thee, Chorazin! wo unto abide till ye go thence. And when ye come into an house, salute it. And if the house be worthy, let your peace come upon it: but if it be not worthy, let your peace return to you. And whosoever shall not receive you, nor hear your words, when ye depart out of that house or city, shake off the dust of your feet. Verily I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, in the day of judgment, than for that city. Behold, I send you forth as sheep in the midst of wolves; be ye therefore wise as serpents, and harmless as doves. He that receiveth you, receiveth me; and he that receiveth me, receiveth him that sent me."	thee, Bethsaida! for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you, they had a great while ago repented, sitting in sackcloth and ashes. But it shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment than for you. And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, shalt be thrust down to hell. He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that despiseth you, despiseth me; and he that despiseth me, despiseth him that sent me."

The TWELVE.	The SEVENTY.

If, after all, the twelve were an order superiour to the seventy, the evidence, whether in these or other parts of the evangelical narrative, is too subtle for our clumsy senses. The Layman, however, whose perceptions are not so dull, has been more fortunate. Let us betake ourselves to his aid.

"The twelve," says he, "were superiour to the seventy, both in dignity and power."

They were superiour in "dignity."

How is this proved? Thus—

1. "The apostles are every where spoken of,

as the constant attendants of our Lord." Therefore, they were of a higher rank than the seventy! The Layman is as active as he is sharp-sighted; but the ditch between his premises and his conclusion being rather too wide for us to leap, we cannot conveniently follow him.

But the Layman has forgotten that there were others, beside the apostles, who are mentioned as the constant attendants of our Lord,* and who received from that circumstance no pre-eminence of authority whatever. The Layman's first argument, then, is "good for nothing."

2. "The commission of the apostles was much more general" than that of the seventy. The latter "were sent before our Lord into the cities whither he himself would come." The former were directed "to preach the gospel to all the Jews." A minister, therefore, who should be instructed to make a preaching tour through the United States, would be of a higher grade than one whose labours should be confined to the state of New York. If this argument of the Layman is not very satisfactory, it is at least ingenious. There is something vastly pleasant in regulating the grandeur of the priesthood by the length of a journey; and determining its grades with a pair of geographical compasses!

3. "The inauguration of the twelve was much more solemn than that of the seventy." Therefore they must be of a superiour order. Because all the world knows that it is impossible to appoint, though on different occasions, officers of the same rank without the very same degree of solemnity. This is demonstration! Is it not, good reader? But in what was the inauguration of the twelve more solemn than that of the seventy?

* Acts i. 21.

"In relation to the first," replies the Layman, "we find our Saviour directing his disciples to pray to God to send labourers into the harvest. We find him continuing himself a whole night in prayer. In the inauguration of the seventy there was nothing of all this solemnity." P. 154.

Nothing! if we read our bible correctly, there is the same direction about prayer to the Lord of the harvest, for labourers in his harvest, coupled with the mission of the seventy, and of the twelve. With respect to his continuing in prayer the whole night previous to the choice of his apostles, is the Layman sure that their appointment was the special cause of our Lord's being thus employed? That he never prayed in this manner upon any other occasion? And particularly, before the election of the seventy? And supposing him to be sure of all this; how does it affect relative dignity? Christ prayed all night before appointing the twelve, and not before appointing the seventy, therefore, the twelve were a superiour order of ministers! It seems, then, that it was not preaching the gospel, nor performing mighty works in his name, which lay so near the Saviour's heart when he was about to send forth his messengers, as to engage him all night in prayer; but it was the desire to set off a superiour order of them with suitable eclat!—When the twelve are to be commissioned, he prays all night. When the seventy are to be commissioned, he is not at the same trouble; and this merely to show that they are not of such high dignity as the others! Poor disciples! To have the same duties and the same trials with your twelve superiours, and much less interest in your master's affections and prayers! It was no small matter, we see, to be a bishop or something like one, in the days of his flesh: And if the Layman will undertake to prove that the successour-bishops have still the same enviable privilege, we shall not refuse him the praise of courage! However, if they act up to the principle of his argument, there is one inference which we think may be drawn from it with rather clearer evidence than his own for the pre-eminence of the apostles above the seventy; and that is, that when the hierarchy is about ordaining bishops, she prays most fervently; and when presbyters are to be ordained, she does not think it worth while to pray at all!

The Layman proceeds:

"The apostles were, likewise, superiour," viz. to the seventy, "in power." p. 154.

How is this proved? Thus:

"They alone received the commission to offer the eucharistic sacrifice of bread and wine."

We stay not to comment on the popish style of this passage. "Eucharistic sacrifice!" The scripture knows neither the name nor the thing, in reference to the commemoration of our Lord's death in the sacrament of the supper. The Layman's argument for the superiority of the twelve is, that they alone were authorized to administer this sacrament. Indeed! How, then, came it to be administered by the Episcopal priests who are not the successours of the apostles? Either this power does not prove superiority of rank, or else the hierarchy has transferred to an inferiour order, one of the peculiar functions of the superiour; and thus corrupted the institutions of Christ. The Layman has his option. It will not be possible to evade the alternative; because the Lord's supper is an ordinance of perpetual obligation, and could not be administered by the apostles till after his death; nor is there a shadow of proof that it was ever administered by them till after his ascension, and the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost. Prove what it will, it cannot prove the superiority of the twelve above the seventy during his abode upon earth. And what is more, there is nothing in the institution of the supper to express the conveyance of authority to administer it. There is nothing but the appointment of it for the observation of the church. This do in re- membrance of me; for as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come. But all communicants "do this in remembrance of him," they all "show forth his death," in the holy supper, as much as did the apostles. The commission to administer the sacraments, and govern the church, was not given till the very moment of his departure from earth.

In the next place:

"To the twelve," says the Layman, "were twelve thrones appointed, whereon they should sit, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." P. 154.

As this language is altogether symbolical, he should have fixed his meaning before he quoted it as a proof. This he has not done, and it is not our business to do it for him. But Cyprian has conceded that Christ held, in his own hands, the supreme authority while he was on earth; the Layman himself has told us, that the twelve during this period, had not the power of ordination; and men who had power, neither to govern nor to ordain, are not very fitly depicted by the symbols of men "sitting upon thrones, and judging the twelve tribes of Israel." The Layman has again mistaken and misrepresented the passage, part of which he has cited. It stands thus, in Math. xix. 28. "Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit in the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." It appears from Luke, ch. xxii. that this promise was addressed to the twelve just before our Lord's passion. Whatever then is meant by the "twelve thrones," and the "judgment of the twelve tribes of Israel," it was not, and could not be possessed by the apostles, till after their master's exaltation: till he should sit in the throne of his glory. He was to bestow it upon them after he should have "ascended up far above all heavens," and not before. This is the text on which the Layman relies for proof of the pre-eminence of the twelve during our Lord's humiliation, when he did not sit in the throne of his glory, and consequently they did not sit on their thrones.

But "on them," viz. the twelve, "was to rest the fabric of the church. The wall of the city having twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb." Rev. xxi. 14.

Another blunder, as usual. A symbolical representation of a state of the church which has not yet happened, is to prove that the twelve were superiour to the seventy in the days of their master's flesh, and before they had received any commission whatever to govern!

There is one argument more.

"Upon the happening of a vacancy, by the apostacy of Judas, Matthias was raised to his bishoprick, being numbered with the eleven apostles, and taking a part of their ministry. Acts i. Matthias had been one of the seventy. For this we have the testimony of Eusebius, of Jerome, of Epiphanius.

Mark, Luke, Sosthenes, with other evangelists, as also the seven deacons, were of the seventy, if the primitive fathers of the church be at all to be relied upon as witnesses of facts. And these persons, even after their promotion, were still inferiour to the twelve, being under their government." P. 154.

The elevation of Matthias to the apostleship took place after the eleven had received their commission from the risen Saviour, and after he had ascended to heaven: and this is to prove that they were superiour to the seventy before his passion. Truly the Layman has a right to make himself merry with the logic of his opponents! But did the seventy retain, after Christ's resurrection, the commission which they had before his death, or did they not? If they did not, the Layman's argument goes to the wall at once. If they did, then it is strange that their official character is never so much as mentioned, after the resurrection, in any part of the New Testament. And it is no less strange that the Layman should represent any of them as being promoted to the office of deacons. Lower they could not be, to be in the "priesthood" at all. And if they were next the apostles, as they were put in a preceding part of the discussion, their being made deacons, was a promotion downwards. They must have been, as belonging to the priesthood, either of the order of deacons, or of a superiour order: if deacons, their ordination to that office by the apostles was a farce; if of a superiour order, it degraded them. The Layman has again his choice. But whether they were then degraded, or promoted, or neither, what has this to do with their own office or that of the apostles, during our Lord's abode upon earth?

So much for the Layman's proofs that the twelve were superiour to the seventy. He has not proved, nor can he, with the whole phalanx of the hierarchy to help him, prove, either from their commission, or from their acts, that the twelve exercised or possessed an atom of power over the seventy.

But our difficulties are not yet ended. We encounter a formidable one in the fact, that the Christian church was not organized at all during our Lord's residence on earth. The ministry of the baptist, his own ministry, and that of the apostles and the seventy, were all preparative. The church could not be organized under the new dispensation, till the Jewish form ceased; and that could not cease till the Messiah had "finished transgression, made an end of sin, and made reconciliation for iniquity," by the sacrifice of himself. Accordingly, he gave his apostles their high commission after his resurrection; and they did not so much as attempt to act upon it, till, as he had promised, they were "endued with power from on high," by the descent of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost. Then they were able to speak in the name of a master who was "set on the right hand of the throne of the majesty in the heavens." Then, and not till then, did the church put on her New Testament form. It is, therefore, perfectly idle to infer what this form should be, from her appearance in her unformed state.

Once more. Had the Episcopal writers even made good their assertions concerning the state of the church in the period we have been reviewing, it would avail them nothing. Because our Lord has settled the platform of his church, the leading principles of her order, by positive statute; and this precludes, to the whole extent of the statute, all reasoning from analogy. We have nothing to do but to ascertain what he has enacted.

Thus have the proofs drawn in favour of the hierarchy, from the Jewish priesthood, and from the state of the church during our Lord's personal ministry, vanished, successively, at the touch.—Grosser abuse of the divine word than we have had occasion to expose, cannot easily be found. The Layman hardly approaches a text without disfiguring it. He is young, very young, in the study of his bible. This is some excuse; and, in his being a layman, he has an apology which cannot be extended to Cyprian, Vindex, or Cornelius. If reading the scriptures, like correct interpreters, were to be the test, we much fear that, in the issue of the present trial, neither himself, nor his reverend associates, would be entitled to plead the benefit of clergy.

Facts to justify the Episcopal claim, have been sought, without effect, in the constitution of the Jewish priesthood, and in that peculiar state of the church which existed during our Lord's personal ministry. These refuges have failed. The hierarchy has been dislodged from all her intrenchments in succession, and left without a resting place for the sole of her foot, in any part of the religious territory which was occupied by the church from the days of Abraham, till the day of Pentecost. We acknowledge, however, that she will suffer little detriment from her defeat, if she can establish herself firmly upon New Testament ground. The strength of her positions here, is next to be tried. If, as she glories, the facts of the New Testament are on her side, we own ourselves vanquished, and have nothing to do but to hand her our swords. But we shall not take her word for it. Let the facts be produced. According to the writers whom we are reviewing, they are found in the pre-eminence of James at Jerusalem; of Timothy at Ephesus; of Titus in Crete; and of the seven angels in the Asiatic churches. Epaphroditus, too, has been occasionally added to the number. The ability and learning of Cyprian, had done him up into a bishop, and had dispatched him from Philippi, in Episcopal majesty, on a visit to Paul at Rome. Unfortunately the good man lost his mitre by the way, so that when he arrived, the apostle could not distinguish him from a simple messenger, who came on an errand from his Philippian friends, and sent him back again in statu quo, without a single mark of prelatical dignity. So we leave him to go in quest of the others. Before investigating the validity of their individual titles, we ask the reader's attention to some general presumptions against the existence of prelates in the apostolic church. Presumptions, in our view, so strong, as almost to supersede the necessity of further examination.

The first is this, that no such order is mentioned, nor even alluded to, either in the salutations of Paul's epistles to the churches, or in his directions for the performance of relative duties. Had prelacy been of apostolic origin; had Paul himself been distinguished for his zeal in establishing it, would there not have been something in his epistles to the churches, appropriated to their chief officer? He gives very exact instructions to every other class of Christians; points out, minutely, their duties to each other; carefully distinguishes between presbyters and deacons; draws their respective characters, and assigns their functions; salutes individual ministers and private Christians, both men and women, by name; but no where says one syllable to the superiour grade of ministers! How is this fact to be explained? That Paul, who observed the most scrupulous propriety in all his addresses—who left no part of religious society any excuse for neglect of duty—who overlooked nothing which might tend to counsel, conciliate, or console—who carefully avoided every thing contemptuous or irritating—who was even solicitious, as we are told, to assert the dignity of prelates above that of presbyters—that this very Paul should take no manner of notice of them in his letters to their dioceses, should enjoin respect and obedience to their subalterns before their faces; and not so much as hint at the obedience which these subalterns owed to them, is past all belief! It would bespeak not a man of discretion; much less a wise man; less still, a great man; least of all an inspired apostle —but a downright idiot. He could not have fallen upon a more effectual method to disgrace them with their people; to encourage insubordination among their presbyters; and, by wantonly sporting with their feelings, to convert them into personal enemies. How then, we ask again, shall this omission be accounted for? It will not do to reply, that as the names of bishop and presbyter were promiscuously used, he joins them in common directions, salutation, and honour. This answer relieves not the difficulty: for it cannot extend to the deacons, whom he expressly distinguishes from the presbyters. Well, then, he singles out the lowest order of clergy, pays them marked attention, and, by this very act, insults the prelates whom his silence had sufficiently mortified. Further, if one set of particular instructions suits different sets of officers, how can their functions be different? If the prerogative of the prelate consist in the power of ordination and government, how can his duties be comprised in a draught of instructions for officers who have no such power? It would be as rational to insist that the very same instructions would suit the governour of a province and the constable of a town. And did not every rule of decorum require, on the part of the apostle, a primary attention to that order which was emphatically to succeed him? that order, without which, we are taught the Christian church can have neither form nor government, nor ministry, nor sacraments, nor lawful assemblies; no, nor even existence? That this order should first be instituted by the apostle, and then passed over in absolute neglect when he is writing to their churches; or be lumped with their inferiours, while the grades of these inferiours are addressed in a manner which it is impossible to mistake, puts all credulity at defiance. The question, therefore, returns, How shall we solve this enigma in the conduct of Paul? The simple solution is, he takes no separate notice of bishops as superiour to presbyters, because no such bishops existed. Other solution there is none. For it is very certain that after their introduction they figured gloriously. Whoever was left in the back ground, the bishop came conspicuously forward—whoever was thrown into the shade, the bishop was irradiated—whoever was treated with neglect, due homage to the bishop was never forgotten. Not such was the fact in the days of St. Paul; therefore, not such was the order which he had instituted.

2. Another presumption, if, indeed, it deserve not a higher name, against the episcopal construction of the New Testament facts, is, that one at least, of the two powers said to be vested exclusively in prelates, is clearly attributed to presbyters. We mean the power of government.

There are three terms employed in the New Testament to express the authority which is to be exercised in the Christian church, and they are all applied to presbyters. These terms are,

1. ἡγεομαι—To take the lead.

2. προϊστημι—To stand before—to preside.

3. ποιμαινω—To act the part, to fulfill the duties of a shepherd.

Every power which Christ hath deputed to his officers, is conveyed by one or other of these terms.

For the greater precision we shall show, first, that they do express the power of government; and then, that each of them is applied to presbyters.

1. ΗΓΕΟΜΑΙ. To take the lead—signifies to "rule." Math. ii. 6. Thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the PRINCES (ἡγεμοσιν) of Juda; for out of thee shall come a GOVERNOUR (ἡγουμενος) that shall RULE my people Israel. The force of the term, then, cannot be questioned. It is applied to presbyters.

Heb. xii. 7. Remember them which HAVE THE RULE OVER you. (τως ἡγουμενων ὑμων your rulers.) The apostle is speaking of their deceased pastors; for he immediately adds, who have spoken unto you the word of God; whose faith follow, considering the END, the issue or termination, of their conversation. Again,

V. 17. Obey them that have the rule over you, (τοις ἡγουμενοις ὑμων) for they watch for your souls as they that must give account.

That these "rulers" were presbyters, is evident from a single consideration; the apostle attributes the power of "ruling," to those deceased pastors who had preached the gospel to the Hebrew converts; and those living ones who "watched for their souls;" which are undeniably the functions of presbyters; therefore Paul recognizes in presbyters, all the power of government expressed by the first term—rulers.

2. ΠΡΟΙΣΤΗΜΙ, or ΠΡΟΙΣΤΑΜΑΙ. To stand or place before—to preside—to rule. 1 Tim. iii. 4. A Bishop must be one that RULETH WELL (καλως προισταμενον) his own house. The same in v. 5. 12.*

The power expressed by this term also, is applied to Presbyters.

1 Thess. v. 12. We beseech you, brethren, to know them which labour among you, and ARE OVER YOU (προϊσταμενους) in the Lord.

* For other references see Raphelii Annot. Phil. in N. T. ad locum, & Schleusneri Novum Lexicon in N. T.

It is a description of ordinary faithful pastors; not of prelates, for there were several at Thessalonica; and diocesan Episcopacy admits of but one in a city. The whole description taken together, supposes the exercise of functions, and an intimacy of intercourse, among the people, which a prelate cannot possibly observe in his diocese; but which is exactly characteristic of the Presbyter. However, to put the matter out of all doubt, Paul charges Timothy, 1 Eph. v. 17. Let the elders that RULE WELL, (οἱ καλως προεστωτες) be accounted worthy of double honour, &c.

Presbyters they are, Episcopacy herself being judge: for this is one of the passages which she quotes to prove their inferiority in the church of Ephesus, to bishop Timothy. The apostle, then, here formally attributes to presbyters the power of "ruling," which we humbly conceive to be much the same with the power of "government."

3. ΠΟΙΜΑΙΝΩ. To exercise the office of a shepherd; hence, to provide for the safety and comfort of any one—to direct, to controul, to govern.

This term being more comprehensive than either of the former two, we crave the reader's indulgence to a minuter proof of the last mentioned acceptation, viz. to "govern."

As early as the days of Homer, this word and its relatives were in familiar use, to designate not only authority, but the highest authority in the commonwealth. Thence that frequent Homeric phrase "the shepherd of the people," for their "king." No one who is in the least conversant with that pre-eminent poet will ask for examples; but lest we should be contradicted by such as are not, and yet wish to pass for "Greek scholars," we subjoin a few; though at the hazard of being again reproved by Mr. Hobart for our "ostentation."

———Δρυαντα τε ΠΟΙΜΕΝΑ λαων.

Il. A. 263.

"Dryas the SHEPHERD of the people"—which the scholiast interprets by Βασιλεα οχλων; "the KING of multitudes."

———πειθοντο τε ΠΟΙΜΕΝΙ λαων Σκηπτουχοι βασιλῆες. Il. B. 85.

"The sceptred kings yielded to the SHEPHERD of the people."—Where the scholiast again explains "shepherd" by "king." Βασιλει.

In the same poet, "shepherd" is used interchangeably with other terms descriptive of the military chiefs of Greece.

Αιαν διογενες, Τελαμωνιε, ΚΟΙΡΑΝΕ λαων. Il. I. 640.
Οἱτινες ΗΓΕΜΟΝΕΣ Δαναων και ΚΟΙΡΑΝΟΙ ἡσαν. Il. B. 487.

Those who are elsewhere called "shepherds," are here named "leaders" and "princes:" the former being interpreted "kings" by the scholiast, as he had already interpreted "shepherds."

In the same way does he translate the latter, in his annotation upon v. 204, of the book last cited. So that by the great master of Grecian language and literature, the three terms, Ποιμην, Ηγεμων, Κοιρανος, i. e. "shepherd," "leader," "prince," are interchangeably used of the same rank, and are all explained by the Greek commentator, Βασιλευς, i. e. "king." Instances might easily be multiplied, but we forbear. We have the rather appealed to Homer, because he depicts that same state of society in which a great portion of the scriptures was written; and alludes to those same objects from which they have borrowed much of their imagery, and many of their terms.

Proceed we now to the septuagint version of the Old Testament, which was completed between two and three centuries before Christ. 2 Kings, v. 2. in our version, 2 Sam. v. 2. The Lord said unto thee, viz. David, thou shalt FEED (ποιμανεις, shalt act as a shepherd to) my people Israel, and thou shalt be a CAPTAIN (ἡγουμενον) over Israel.

Precisely the same sort of example is to be found in Ch. vii. 7, 1 Chron. ii. 2. xvii. 6; also Ps. xlviii. 14. Death shall FEED upon (ποιμανει, shall have the rule over) them.

The New Testament is equally decisive. Math. ii. 6. Thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda; for out of thee shall come a GOVERNOUR (ἡγουμενος) that shall RULE (ποιμανει, feed, superintend as a shepherd,) my people Israel. The prophet speaks of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the "good shepherd," and the "chief shepherd;" and who had, and has, "the government upon his shoulder." Is. ix. 6.

This term, likewise, is applied to Presbyters.

Acts xx. 17, 28. From Miletus, Paul sent to Ephesus, and called the PRESBYTERS of the church and said unto them—Take heed unto yourselves, and to all the flock over which the Holy Ghost hath made you BISHOPS to FEED (ποιμαινειν, like good shepherds, to provide for, watch over, and govern,) the church of God, &c.

1 Pet. v. 2, 3. The PRESBYTERS who are among you, I exhort, who am also a PRESBYTER. FEED (ποιμανατε) the flock of God which is among you, taking the OVERSIGHT (επισκοπουντες, discharging the duty of BISHOPS) thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind: Neither as being LORDS over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock.

It is obvious, upon the very face of the texts, that these presbyters of Ephesus, and of the dispersion, are considered as vested with the pastoral care in all its extent; and they are commanded to be faithful to the trust reposed in them, by providing for the protection, nurture, and comfort of the flock of God. This "feeding" the flock, this discharge of the pastoral duty, is directly opposed by Peter, to being "lords over God's heritage," i. e. to rigorous and oppressive government; or, as we commonly say, to "lording it" over them. The contrast could have had no place, had not these presbyters been church governours; for it is idle to warn men against abusing a power which they do not possess. By instructing them how they were to govern the church, the Apostle has decided that the power of government was committed to them. No higher authority than he has recognized in them, can belong to the order of prelates. For the very same term by which he marks the power of the presbyters, is employed in scripture, to mark the authority of our Lord Jesus Christ himself.*

The reader cannot for a moment, suppose that we put any power left in the church, on a level with that of her divine master. Far from us be the thought of such blasphemy. But we contend for these two things.

1st. That the term which both Paul and Peter apply to the office of presbyters, undoubtedly expresses the power of government; seeing it is the term which expresses the office of Christ, as the governour of his people Israel.

2d. That as this term, applied to the office of Christ, expresses the highest power of government in him as the chief shepherd; so, when applied to the office of the under shepherds, it expresses the highest power of government which he has delegated to be exercised in his name for the welfare of his church. But this power is vested, Paul and Peter being judges, in presbyters; therefore, presbyters, by the appointment of Jesus Christ, are invested with the highest power of government known in his church.

* Math. ii. 6—ἡγουμενος οστις ΠΟΙΜΑΝΕΙ τον λαον μου, &c.

We go further: The authority conveyed by the charge to "feed the flock of God," comprehends the ordering of all things necessary to her well being; and, therefore, the power of ordination likewise. An essential part of the Redeemer's pastoral office, was, and is, to provide under-pastors for his sheep. This, at first, he did in person, by immediate vocation. But having "ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things," he performs the same office through the medium of the pastors whom he has left in the church. The question is to what pastors has he committed the trust of ordaining other pastors, and thus preserving the pastoral succession? We answer, to presbyters: for he has affixed to their office, that very term which designates his own right and care to furnish his church with pastors, or lawful ministers. Let our Episcopal brethren show as much for their prelates, if they can.

To sum up what has been said on this article: No expression more clear and decisive than those we have considered, are used in the scripture to denote either the communication, or the possession, or the exercise, of the ordinary powers given by Christ for the well ordering of his church. And we have shown, that the New Testament has, in the most direct and ample manner, confided them all to presbyters.

Unless, therefore, we adopt the insane paradox of Hammond, viz. that the presbyters of the New Testament were all diocesan bishops, the passages quoted must bear one of two senses. Either they point out, under the denomination of presbyters, those officers who are strictly so called, in contradistinction from prelates and deacons; or they use the name with sufficient latitude to include the prelates too. If the former, our position is established. If the latter, then prelates and presbyters are joined together in the power of government, which the hierarchy maintains is confined to prelates alone. In either way, the argument is conclusive against her.

3d. At a very early period of the Christian church, presbyters did actually exercise the power of government: exercised it in conjunction with the apostles themselves; and that upon the principle of parity.

The important question concerning the obligation upon Christians to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses, in order to salvation, was referred by the church at Antioch, to the apostles and elders at Jerusalem. The historian does not mean apostles and elders who had a fixed and permanent charge at Jerusalem, which was essentially incompatible with their apostolic vocation. But as that city had been the cradle of the Christian church, and was the centre of religious communication from all parts of the world, the apostles returned thither from their excursions in preaching the gospel, accompanied with Elders or Presbyters from the churches which they had planted, and met together in ecclesiastical council to consult about their common interest. Herein they have set us the example, and left us the warrant, of a delegated body, as the ultimate resort in all ecclesiastical affairs: for, such a body, to all intents and purposes, was the assemblage of the apostles and elders at Jerusalem. Of this most venerable primitive Synod, we treat no further at present than to ascertain what share the presbyters had in its proceedings. The following things appear indisputable.

1st. The apostles and presbyters met in common; that is, they formed but one assembly. Of a "house of bishops," and a "house of clerical and lay delegates," they had no idea. This improvement in church-government was reserved for discovery by those who have been trained in the school of the "judicious"* Hooker.

* This appellation was bestowed upon Hooker by James VI. who was delighted, beyond measure, with his famous work on ecclesiastical polity. And delighted with it for the same reason which, no doubt, ravished the heart of Cardinal Allen, and Pope

2d. The right of the presbyters to sit in judgment with the apostles upon all ecclesiastical concerns, which were not to be decided by special revelation, was well understood in the churches.

The proof of this proposition lies in the very terms of the reference from Antioch. For it is inconceivable, how the church there should think of submitting a question, so weighty in itself, and so extensive in its consequences, to the "elders," conjointly with the "apostles," if they had not been taught that presbyters were the ordinary church governours, and were to continue such after the decease of the others. This explains why they went up with the apostles to Jerusalem. It was not only to give them opportunities of information; but also, if not chiefly, to learn the proper mode of dispatching the public business. Before this council or synod, composed of apostles and elders, was the interesting reference from Antioch laid; by them was it discussed, and by them decided.

3d. The apostles, on this occasion, acted simply as members of the synod; they did nothing in vir-

Clement the VIII.* viz. that the principle of Hooker's book, and the scope of his argument, are to prove the right of the church to model her government as she shall judge for edification. We shall touch this subject again. Does not the reader suppose that this must be a truly Protestant work, which excited the admiration and rapture of the pope and his cardinals!

* Hooker's life, p. 78, 79. Works, vol. I. 8vo.

tue of their extraordinary, which was their apostolical, character, nor introduced into the deliberations of the assembly, any influence but that of facts; of the written scripture; and of reasoning founded on the comparison of both. All this is evident from the narrative in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts; and resulted from the nature of the case. Had the question been to be determined by special revelation or apostolic authority, one inspired man, or one apostle, would have answered as well as a dozen. The dispute might have been settled on the spot, and by Paul himself. Had there arisen any doubt of his power, or distrust of his integrity, a hundred miracles, if necessary, would instantly have removed the obstacle. In every view, the embassy to Jerusalem would have been an useless parade.

The truth is, that the apostles acted in a double capacity. They had that authority which was designed to be ordinary and perpetual, such as preaching the word, administering the sacraments, and governing the church. But superadded to this, they had also the authority of special messengers for extraordinary and temporary purposes. If a new church was to be founded among the nations—if any part of the rule of faith was to be revealed—if a particular emergency required a particular interposition; in these and similar cases, their extraordinary character found its proper objects: they "spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost:" their judgment was infallible, and their authority paramount. But for the ordinary government of the church, or any part of it, they do not appear to have enjoyed these extraordinary communications of the divine spirit; nor to have exerted their extraordinary powers; nor to have claimed a particle of authority above the presbyters. Without such a distinction as we have now stated, their history is a tissue of inconsistencies, and their conduct in the synod of Jerusalem must be given up as a riddle that baffles solution.

Seeing, therefore, that in the apostolic epistles and salutations to the churches, there is no mention of prelates, although there is frequent mention of presbyters and deacons—that presbyters are formally addressed as possessing the power of government—and that they actually did exercise it in matters of the highest moment, the advocate for diocesan episcopacy must adduce scriptural facts to support him under the depressing weight of all these considerations. As he maintains that prelates are at least of apostolic origin; and that they alone succeeded the apostles in the powers of ordination and government, his facts must not only be plausible when detached from their place and bearings in the Christian history, and when decorated with appendages of his own imagination; but they must accord with the language of the New Testament, and with its narrative; they must be so decisive as to annihilate the foregoing difficulties; and must not admit of a fair and rational explanation upon Presbyterian principles. With such facts, he tells us, he is ready to confront us. Our curiosity is awake: let us look at them without further delay.

He refers us for one fact, to that same synod of Jerusalem which we have just left. We must go back again.

"If from Crete," says Cyprian, "we pass to Jerusalem, we shall there discover equally striking evidence* that St. James, the brother of our Lord, possessed in that place the pre-eminence of a bishop in the church. In the first council that was held there, in order to determine the controversy which had arisen in regard to the circumcision of Gentile converts, we find him pronouncing an authoritative sentence. His sentence, we remark also, determined the controversy. "Wherefore my sentence is, says he, that we trouble not those who from among the Gentiles are turned unto God." In Acts xxi. 17 and 18, we are told, "that when St. Paul and his company were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received him gladly; and that the next day following, Paul went in with them unto James, and all the Elders or Presbyters were present." Acts xii. 17, it is said, that "Peter, after he had declared to the Christians to whom he went, his miraculous deliverance, bade them go and

* What this "striking evidence" is, remains to be seen hereafter. We shall reduce the out-works of the hierarchy before we close in upon her citadel. This is the Episcopal character of Timothy and Titus, as her chieftains confess, as their anxiety to defend it sufficiently indicates, even without their confession. In the mean time, we believe Cyprian to be pretty correct in making the evidence for the episcopate of James at Jerusalem, to be "equally striking" with that of Titus's at Crete. For we hope to prove that in both cases it amounts to just nothing at all!

show these things to James and to the brethren." In Galatians ii. 12, St. Paul says, "that certain came from James," that is, from the church of Jerusalem to the church of Antioch. Surely these passages strongly indicate that James held the highest dignity in the church of Jerusalem. The brethren carry Paul and his company to him as to a supreme officer. He has presbyters and deacons in subordination to him. When messengers are sent from Jerusalem to other churches, it is not done in the name of the presbyters and deacons, or of the church of this place; it is done in the name of James. Do not these considerations prove James was the supreme ruler of that church?"

The first argument of Cyprian for the episcopal pre-eminence of James, is, that he pronounced in the synod of Jerusalem, "an authoritative sentence;" and that "his sentence determined the controversy." The proof is, that expression in his speech to the council, "Wherefore, my sentence is, that we trouble not those who from among the Gentiles are turned unto God." Acts xv. 19.

We are under the necessity of objecting, for the third time, to these writers, that they put into the mouth of the person whom they quote, declarations which he never uttered. They will make James deliver an authoritative sentence as the bishop of Jerusalem. They, perhaps, could not help themselves, as they have only followed their file leaders. Potter had said the same thing; and they took it as they found it. But the editor of Lycophron, and author of the "Antiquities of Greece," was "a scholar, and a ripe and good one." He knew that he was standing on slippery ground; and so to save his own reputation, he slily fathers his construction of James's words upold *Hesychius.

But in opposition to Cyprian, and the Layman, and archbishop Potter, and Hesychius too, we shall show,

1. That there is nothing in the language of James, from which it can be inferred that he, as the superiour officer, pronounced an authoritative sentence, and,

2. That it was impossible for him to pronounce such a sentence.

The first point is to be settled by a critical examination of his phraseology. His words are, Διο εγω ΚΡΙΝΩ, which our translators have rendered "Wherefore MY SENTENCE is."

The primitive meaning of the word is to discriminate, to separate, to select, to arrange. Thus Homer,

—Δημητηρ
ΚΡΙΝΕΙ, στειγομενων ανεμων ΚΑΡΠΟΝ τε και ΑΧΝΑΣ.
Il. E. 501.

"Separates, by the winds, the chaff from the wheat."

* Discourse on Church Government, p. 91. In a note, the learned prelate cites Hesychius as thus distinguishing—"Peter addresses the council; but James enacts the law." Πετρος δημηγορει, αλλ' Ιακωβος νομοθετει. Potter's precaution passed unobserved. The reason probably is, that it was locked up in the quotation from Hesychius, "Græcum est; et non potest legi!" said the Trojans of Oxford, whenever a line of Greek came in their way.

——————ΚΡΙΝΑΣ τ'ανα δημον αριστους.
Od. Δ. 666.

"Selecting the most valiant throughout the people."

ΚΡΙΝ' ανδρας κατα φυλα. Il. B. 362.

"Arrange the men according to their nations."

From this primitive notion, the word, by a very natural transition, came to signify the formation of an opinion, or judgment, and the expression of it when formed, because no opinion or judgment can exist without a previous process by which the mind discriminates between its own perceptions. And thus the word is familiarly used by writers both profane and sacred.

——μισει δε πλεον η δικη ΚΡΙΝΑΝΤΕΣ.

"Forming their opinion rather from hatred than justice," says Thucydides of the Platæans, with respect to their judgment of the Thebans.*

——την διακοσμησιν και ταξιν ΚΡΙΝΕΙΝ ου τυχης——ειναι καστασματα

"To think that the beautiful order of the universe is not the production of fortune."†

——τω τουτο ΚΡΙΝΕΙΣ.

"Why dost thou think so? upon what ground art thou of this opinion?"‡

In the speech of Hermocrates to the Syracusans,

* Thucyd. III. 67. p. 209. ed Dukeri.
† Diod. Sic. Lib. xii. 84. Tom. I. p. 491. ed Wessel.
‡ Aristoph. Plut v. 48. p. 9. ed Kusteri.

as recorded by Thucydides, there is a perfect parallel to the expression of James.

"We shall consult," says he, "if we be in our right minds, not only our own immediate interests; but whether we shall be able still to preserve all Sicily, against which, in my judgment, the Athenians are plotting."*

The same use of the word is so common in the New Testament, that examples are almost superfluous. We shall, however, subjoin a few, because they will bring our criticism more directly within the reach of the unlearned reader.

Luke vii. 43. Simon said—I suppose that he to whom he forgave most. And he said unto him, Thou hast rightly judged (ορθως EKPINAΣ.) Simon's judgment was surely not an official one. It was simply his opinion, or conclusion, from the case proposed to him.

John vii. 24. JUDGE not (Μη KPINETE) according to the appearance, but JUDGE righteous JUDGMENT (KPIΣIN KPINATE.) No "authoritative sentence" is contemplated here.

Acts xii. 46. Seeing—ye JUDGE yourselves (KPINETE) unworthy, &c.

2 Cor. v. 14, 15. The love of Christ constraineth us, because we thus JUDGE (KPINANTAΣ τουτο,) &c. "Concerning the love of Christ," saith Paul,

* —ου περι των ιδιων μονον, ει σωφρονωμεν, ἡ συνοδος εσται· αλλ' ει επιβουλευομενην την πασαν Σικελιαν, ΩΣ ΕΓΩ ΚΡΙΝΩ, ὑπ' Αθηναιων, δυνησομεθα ετι διασωσαι. Thucyd. iv. 60. p. 272. ed Dukeri.

" this is our sentiment, our mode of reasoning, that if one died for all," &c.

In every one of the preceding quotations, the very same word is used which occurs in the speech of James, and, in the very same sense. It is the plainest Greek imaginable to express the result of one's reflections. This is all that the words of James imply. He spoke among the last; he availed himself of the discussion which had already taken place: And when his opinion was matured, he submitted it to the council in the form of a temperate and conciliatory proposition. We ask any man of plain sense, to look over the chapter, and say whether this is not a natural and satisfactory account of the whole affair. Little did the guileless disciple suspect that his familiar and innocent expression, would be converted, in these latter days, into a certificate of his being a diocesan bishop! And had not the "proofs" of the hierarchy been, like lords' wits, rather "thinly sown," she would never have attempted to cull one from a form of speech which might have been adopted by the obscurest member of the council, with as much propriety as by James himself.

We have neither interest nor disposition to conceal what is well known to even smatterers in Greek, that the term which we have shown to be familiarly used to signify the expression of opinion generally, is also used, and with equal familiarity, in a more restricted sense, of a judicial opinion; or, if you prefer it, an "authoritative sentence." But then it always presupposes the judicial or authoritative character of the person to whom it is applied. Thus the senses of the word rank.

1. To discriminate—to select—to arrange.—Thence,

2. To form a judgment—to express an opinion,—and thence,

3. To pronounce an official judgment; or "an authoritative sentence."

But who does not see that you must first know under what circumstances a person is represented as speaking or acting, before you can determine whether the writer intends, by the word we are considering, a mere selection of one thing from a number of others? or an opinion as expressed in conversation or debate? or a solemn judicial sentence? Had the prelatic dignity of James been first established; and had the synod at Jerusalem been a convocation of his clergy, there would have been a propriety in attributing to him an "authoritative" decision, and interpreting his words accordingly. But to argue from his "my sentence is," that he was a prelate, is completely begging the question. The argument assumes that he was the bishop of Jerusalem; for this is indispensable to that "authority" which Cyprian ascribes to his words; and it is exactly taking for granted, the thing to be proved.

Another unfortunate circumstance for the Episcopal construction of James's speech is, that it contradicts the sacred historian. In the very next chapter he tells us, that Paul and Silas delivered to the cities through which they passed, "the decrees for to keep, that were ordained (KEKPIMENA) of the apostles and elders." Ch. xvi. 4. Cyprian says that James pronounced the "authoritative sentence." The inspired historian says, that it was pronounced by the apostles and elders. Both cannot be true; and we are inclined to think that the rector of the episcopal church in Albany, cannot stand in the judgment, even with Potter and Hesychius to back him. The affront put upon the narrative of Luke is the more conspicuous, as the term which, in the mouth of James, is tortured into an "authoritative sentence," here occurs in that sense most unequivocally: because the reference from Antioch was brought before the tribunal of the apostles and elders. They were recognized as Judges having cognizance of the question; and theirs was, of course, an authoritative sentence. James was, indeed, one of the judges; he acted in his judicial character, but that character was common to him with every other member of the council; and like theirs, his only influence was that of his wisdom and his vote. The scripture, then, being judge, it is incontestible, that he did NOT pronounce an "authoritative sentence."

Our second position is, that it was impossible for James to exercise such a power as the advocates of Episcopacy attribute to him. Our proofs are these:

1. The cause was not referred to him; and accordingly it was not tried in the court of "St. James;" but in the court of the "apostles and elders," as the representatives of the Christian church.

2. It could not be referred to him; nor could he, as bishop of Jerusalem, have any cognizance of it; Antioch being entirely without his jurisdiction.

3. The decision of the council was received and obeyed with alacrity through the churches of Asia. But had it been pronounced by an authority so limited and local as that of the bishop of Jerusalem, the effect must have been very different. Unless we should suppose, that all the Asiatic cities through which Paul and Silas passed, were subject to the see of Jerusalem; and, then, we shall not only spoil the Episcopal argument from the seven angels of Asia; but shall overturn the whole system of the hierarchy, as it is pretended to have been established by apostolic ordination: because we shall admit, that, instead of fixing bishops at proper distances for governing the church within convenient dioceses, the apostles put the immense regions of Asia under a spiritual head in the land of Judea. Indeed, we have always thought it hard, upon the Episcopal plan, that, considering the importance and the wealth of Antioch, not a bishop could be mustered for that distinguished city; but she must go for direction all the way to the prelate of Jerusalem!

4. The assembly in which James delivered his speech was not composed of clergy belonging to his diocese; and, therefore, he could not, even upon episcopal principles, pronounce an "authoritative sentence." The reason is obvious: he could not exercise authority over those who were not under his controul. There were present at the council, not only "presbyters," but "apostles." Peter was there, Paul was there, and how many others, we do not know. Had James then pronounced an "authoritative sentence," he had been above not only all the presbyters of his own diocese, but above all the deputies from Antioch; above all the members of the council from whatever part of the world; above the apostles themselves! Look, then, at this fact of the hierarchy. It turns the very apostles into mere make-weights of bishop James! It sets up an authority much like that of a visible head of the church catholic, than the papists have ever been able to produce for their "St. Peter!" If this is not a "bold stroke" for a bishop, pray, gentlemen, what is? And if any of our readers can digest such a dish of absurdity, we wish him much comfort of his meal!

We shall not trespass long upon the patience of either our friends or our foes, in disposing of the "remains" of Cyprian's proofs. "When St. Paul and his company were come to Jerusalem, the brethren received him gladly, and the next day following, Paul went in with them unto James, and all the elders or presbyters were present." It was rather rustic in Paul not to pay his court to the bishop first. We have learnt, at the expense of some mortification, that in New-York any communication with the clergy, on ecclesiastical matters, except through the medium of the bishop, is an invasion of episcopal order. But Paul must be pardoned for committing an oversight, especially as Cyprian, to be even with him, has done so too. He has stopped at that part of the narrative, which, in his eyes, holds James forth in something of bishop-like majesty, and forgot to tell the rest of the story. The reader, no doubt, would expect to hear of a very pointed conference between James and the apostle, all the presbyters listening with due humility to their superiours; but if he turn to the history, (Acts xxi.) he will find these same presbyters most uncivilly advising the apostle; and what is still worse, telling him that they had decided the reference from Antioch. Cyprian asserts that James made the decision. They, on the contrary, have the assurance to tell the apostle Paul, in the presence of James himself, that the presbyters had decided it. And all this while not a word of bishop James! In the following ages the presbyters were taught better manners.

But then, it seems, that after Peter's "miraculous deliverance, he bade the Christians go and show these things to James, and to the brethren"—Also, that "certain came from James, that is, from the church of Jerusalem to the church of Antioch." Therefore, James was bishop of Jerusalem! Very sagely and conclusively reasoned! As if such things did not happen every day in places where there are ministers of the gospel distinguished by their talent or standing. The writer of this review stepped the other evening into the house of that venerable Christian veteran, the Reverend Dr. Rodgers, and found there "certain brethren" who had just come from one of their judicatories. It is quite common for people to talk of Dr. Rodgers' sending ministers to preach; and even to designate his denomination as Dr. Rodgers' church! Therefore Dr. Rodgers is bishop of New-York; and primate of the Presbyterian church in North-America!!

"Thus endeth the first lesson," which is concerning Cyprian's "striking evidence" that James was bishop of Jerusalem.

Having disposed of the see of Jerusalem, which had been gratuitously conferred on James, we proceed to the argument in favour of Diocesan Episcopacy, from the epistles addressed, in the book of the Revelation, to the seven churches of Asia. We give it in the words of Cyprian. And as it may possibly amuse the reader, while it convinces him that we were correct in saying that Archbishop Potter is one of the real authors under the signatures of Cyprian, &c. we shall put his Grace of Canterbury side by side with our Albany friend.

POTTER.

" St. John, in the three first chapters of his Revelation, has given us a lively description of seven bishops who presided in the seven principal cities of the pro-consular Asia. Our Lord is there introduced, sending seven epistles to the seven churches of these cities, directed to the seven angels of the churches, whom he calls the seven stars in his right hand. Now if it appears that the seven angels

CYPRIAN.

" In the three first chapters of the Revelations of St. John, we find absolute demonstration of the existence of the Episcopal dignity and authority, at the time in which this work was written. In these chapters, St. John gives us a description of the seven Bishops, who superintended the interests of the church in the seven principal cities in the Pro-Consular Asia. Our Lord is represented as sending seven Epistles to the seven churches of these cities, directed to the seven angels of the churches, whom he calls the " seven stars in his right hand." From all the circum-

POTTER.

were so many single persons invested with supreme authority in the seven churches, there can be no reason to doubt, whether they were the bishops of these churches; a bishop being nothing else but one who has chief authority in the church.

"Let us examine in the first place, whether the seven angels were so many single persons? And first of all, it is manifest they were not the whole church or collective body of Christians in their several cities; because the churches are represented by seven candlesticks, which are all along distinguished from the seven stars, which are emblems of the angels. Neither were they any select number or body of men: For they are constantly mentioned as single persons; the angel of the church of Ephesus, the angel of the church of Smyrna, and so the rest."

"Accordingly, both he and all the rest are constantly addressed to in the singular number; I know thy works, I have a few things against thee, remember how thou hast stances that are mentioned, it undeniably appears that these seven angels were so many single persons, invested with supreme authority in the churches; that is to say, they were the bishops of those churches.

CYPRIAN.

"I say it manifestly appears, that these seven angels of the churches, whom the Lord calls the "seven stars" in his right hand, were single persons. They were not the whole church or collective body of Christians. This is proved incontestably from these considerations. The whole Churches, or collective body of Christians, are represented by "seven candlesticks," which are distinguished from the "seven stars," that are emblems of the Angels, the Bishops. They are constantly mentioned in the singular number. "The Angel of the Church of Ephesus"—"the Angel of the Church of Smyrna," and so of the rest.

And in the epistle to Thyatira it is said, "I know thy works." "I have a few things against thee." "Remember how thou hast heard." "Thou hast kept the word of my pa-

POTTER.

heard, thou hast kept the word of my patience, and so in the rest, where our Lord speaks to them in particular: But when what he writes equally concerns the people, he changes his style, and speaks in the plural: The devil shall cast some of you into prison. Thou hast not denied my faith when Antipas my faithful martyr was slain among you. I will reward every one of you according to your works. That which ye have, hold fast till I come. Which variation of the number, is a plain argument that some parts of these Epistles relate to the whole churches, and others only to the persons of the angels."

"But there is one thing yet behind, which will put this matter beyond dispute: namely, that the titles of angels and stars are constantly applied in this book of Revelation to single men: Our Lord is called the Morning Star, and the Sun, and the apostles are called twelve stars, and twelve angels; but there is not one example where these titles are given to any society or number of men. So that if we will allow the divine author of this book to speak in this place, as he does in all others, the angels tience." This is the style which is used when the Angel or Bishop of the Church is addressed.——

CYPRIAN.

But when what is said relates to the people, the style is altered, the plural number is then used. "The devil shall cast some of you into prison."

"I will reward every one of you according to your works. That which ye have, hold fast till I come." And this variation in the number, proves that some parts of these Epistles relate to the whole Church, and others only to the Angels.

But what places this subject beyond all reasonable doubt is this circumstance: The titles of Angels and stars are constantly applied in the book of Revelation to single men, and never to a society or number of men. Our Lord is called the "morning star and the sun," and the twelve Apostles are called "twelve stars," and "twelve Angels."

It is evident, therefore, that the seven stars or Angels in the book of Revelation, are single persons.

POTTER.	CYPRIAN.
of the seven churches can be none but single persons.
"The next thing to be made out is, that these single persons were men of chief authority in their several churches. And we might safely conclude they were so, though we had no other proof of it, because our Lord has directed to them the Epistles, which he designed for the use of their churches. But there are several other arguments, which prove that the angels were men of eminent station and authority: For whereas the churches are only called candlesticks, the angels are resembled to stars, which give light to the candlesticks."	That these persons possessed supreme authority in the Churches, is also demonstrated from these considerations.
	These Epistles are addressed to them alone.
	The Churches are called candlesticks, and they the stars which give light to the candlesticks.
"They are praised for all the good, and blamed for all the evil which happened in their churches. The angel of Ephesus is commended, because he could not bear them that were evil, and had tried those who called themselves Apostles, and were not so; which seems to imply, that he had judicially convicted them to be impostors. And the angel of Pergamos is reproved for having them who hold the doctrine of Balaam; that is, the Nicolaitans, who allowed themselves to	The seven angels are praised for all the good which they had done, and blamed for all the evil which happened in the Churches. The Angel of Ephesus is commended because "he could not bear them that were evil, and had tried those who called themselves Apostles, and were not so," which seems to imply that he had convicted them of imposture. The Angel of Pergamos is reproved for having them "who hold the doctrine of Balaam, and he is severely

Potter.	Cyprian.
commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed to idols; and he is severely threatened, unless he repented: which shows he had authority to correct these disorders, otherwise he could not justly have been punished for them. The same may be said of the angel of Thyatira, who is blamed for suffering Jezebel, who called herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce the people. And the angel of Sardis is commanded to be watchful, and to strengthen those who are ready to die; otherwise our Lord threatens to come on him, as a thief, at an hour which he should not know."	threatened unless he repented." This shows that he possessed authority to correct these disorders, or he could not justly be menaced with punishment for permitting them. The Angel of Thyatira also is blamed for suffering "Jezebel," who called herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce the people. And the Angel of Sardis is commanded "to be watchful, and to strengthen those who are ready to die," otherwise our Lord threatens to come on him "as a thief; at an hour which he should not know."

The writers under review, having a great contempt for all reasoning from names, promised to intrench themselves within scriptural facts. One of their facts they find in the history of the "stars" or "angels" of the seven churches. Yet if the reader shall attentively inspect their argument, which we have placed before him in its full strength, he will perceive that it rests entirely upon their interpretation of two names. These are "angel" and "star:" which, in the symbolical language of the scripture, are as really names of office, as bishop, presbyter, deacon, are in its alphabetical or common language. The aspect of the fact changes with the construction of these two symbols. You must fix their sense before you can tell what the fact is. Unless you can prove that "star" and "angel" necessarily denote individuals, and such individuals as diocesan bishops, the fact, instead of being for the hierarchy, will be against her. And thus her advocates, under the pretext of "absolute demonstration," put us off with what they themselves have again and again declared to be "miserable sophistry"—"the old and wretched sophistry of names."

Let us, however, examine this, their "absolute demonstration" of diocesan Episcopacy. It turns, as we just now said, upon the interpretation of the symbolical titles, "angel" and "star." These, our prelatical friends maintain, "are constantly applied in the book of Revelation to single men, and never to a society or number of men." Such is the assertion—now for the proof.

"The whole churches, or collective bodies of Christians, are represented by "seven candlesticks," which are distinguished from the "seven stars," that are emblems of the angels, the bishops."

The distinction is admitted: but it is equally marked upon the Presbyterian plan. For the collective body of the ministry is quite as distinguishable from their churches, as the bishops alone can be. Nothing is gained here. We go on.

"They," the angels, "are constantly mentioned in the singular number."

What then? Does this prove that the singular term "angel" has never a collective sense?

What next? Nothing at all. Let out readers examine, again, the whole of what Cyprian has said upon this point, and if they can detect, in the multitude of his words, and his show of illustration, any thing more than his mere assertion, we shall be disappointed.

The stars and angels, says he, are distinguished from the churches. True—but they may be so without being diocesan bishops——

"They are constantly mentioned in the singular number"—which is not true. And if it were, the question still is, whether the symbolical term in the singular number must necessarily signify only a single person—O yes, says Cyprian, most undoubtedly. "What places this subject beyond all reasonable doubt, is this circumstance. The titles of angels and stars are constantly applied in the book of Revelation, to single men, and never to a society or number of men!" Now this is exactly the thing to be proved.

Amphora cœpit
Institui: currente rota cur urceus exit?

Cyprian sets out with a threat of "absolute demonstration," and leaves off with begging the question.*

* Potter, in his zeal to make out the prelatic character of these angels, presses into his service a various reading. "If," says he,

That the assertions which Cyprian has borrowed from Potter, are not accompanied with quite an "absolute demonstration," may be gathered from the light in which they are considered by Episcopal writers no way inferiour to Potter himself.

"Methinks," says Dr. Henry More, "it is extremely harsh to conceit that these seven stars are merely the seven bishops of any particular churches of Asia, as if the rest were not supported nor guided by the hand of Christ; or as if there were but seven in his right hand, but all the rest in his left. Such high representations

"in the epistle to Thyatira, instead of (την γυναικα Ιεζεβηλ,) the woman Jezebel, we read (την γυναικα σου Ιεζεβηλ,) thy wife Jezebel, as it is in St. Cyprian, the Syriac version, the Alexandrian, and several other manuscript copies, then the Angel of Thyatira was a married man, and consequently but one person."*

Learning, when not well directed, falls into absurdities which plain sense avoids. It is hard for a man to suspect himself of blundering when he is displaying his erudition. But on this occasion, the eyes of Potter seem to have been blinded by the dust of his manuscripts. If we adopt his reading, and make "Jezebel" a literal woman, by making her the wife of the prelate of Thyatira, the symbolical or figurative sense of the text is gone. And in order to be consistent, the crimes charged upon her must also be literal. Thus we shall not only have my lady of Thyatira an open adulteress; but the diocese a huge brothel under her inspection; where by example and by precept, she initiates her husband's flock in the mysteries of lewdness and idolatry. A goodly occupation for the spouse of a diocesan! Bad times, one would think, for an angel-bishop; and not the most flattering compliment to episcopal discipline.

* Discourse of Church government, p. 145, 3d edit.

cannot be appropriated to ANY SEVEN PARTICULAR CHURCHES WHATSOEVER." Again, "By angels, according to the apocalyptick style, all the agents under their presidency are represented or insinuated—and it is so frequent and obvious in the Apocalypse, that none that is versed therein can any ways doubt of it."*

The great, and justly celebrated Joseph Mede, observes, that "Angels, by a mode of speaking not uncommon in this book, are put for the nations over which they were thought to preside. Which appears hence, that they who, by the injunction of the oracle, are loosed, are armies of cavalry sent forth to slaughter men."†

Just after he adds, "the four angels, (Rev. ix. 14,) "signify so many Sultanies or kingdoms."‡

Dr. Fulk, in his answer to the Rhemish Testament, remarks, that "St. John, by the angels of the churches, meaneth not all that should wear on their heads mitres, and hold crosier-staves in their hands, like dead idols, but them that are faithful messengers of God's word, and utter and declare the same. They are called the † Angeli ponuntur pro gentibus quibus præesse credebantur, non inusitatâ in hoc libro metonymiâ. Id ex eo apparet, quòd qui continuò ex oraculi præscripto solvuntur, Exercitus Equestres sunt, hominibus occidendis emissi. In Apocap. B. III. Tub. VI. Works, p. 471.

* Exposition of the seven churches, Works, p. 724.

‡ Angeli quatuor totidem Sultanias seu regna significant. Ibid.

Angels of the churches because they are God's messengers."*

The famous Stillingfleet, in his Irenicum, asks, concerning these angels, "If, in the prophetick style, any unity may be set down by way of representation of a multitude; what evidence can be brought from the name, that by it some one particular person must be understood?"—And a little further he says, "If many things in the Epistles be direct to the angels, but yet so as to concern the whole body, then of necessity, the angel must be taken as a representative of the whole body, and then, why may not the word angel be taken by way of representation of the body itself; either of the whole church, or, which is far more probable, of the Consessus, or order of Presbyters in that church? We see what miserable, unaccountable arguments those are, which are brought for any kind of government, from metaphorical or ambiguous expressions or names promiscuously used."†

* This and the following quotation, are from the Appendix to Ayton's Original Constitution of the Christian Church.

† It is the fashion with the Jure divino prelatists to decry this work of Stillingfleet as the production of his juvenile days; and as being recanted by him in maturer life. The true reason of their dislike to it is, that it has sorely gravelled them from the date of its publication till the present hour, and is likely to gravel them in all time hereafter. We cannot, however, see what the age or the recantation of the author, (if he did recant,) has to do with the question, any further than as it may be influenced by his

We quote these passages, not to make them our own, but to show that Episcopal writers of the highest reputation, entertain opinions very different from those of Potter and Cyprian, as to the evidence which the apocalyptic angels give in favour of their hierarchy :

" It is absolute demonstration," says Cyprian. " It is a harsh conceit," says Dr. H. More.

" The titles of angels and stars are never applied," says Cyprian after Potter, " to a society or number of men." They signify " them that private opinion. " Old men are not always wise ;" nor do green years detract from the force of argument. Facts and reasonings having no dependence upon a writer's name, stand or fall in their own strength. It is one thing to recant, and quite another to refute. The learned, but unhappy Whitby, who, in his commentary on the New Testament, had zealously defended the divinity and atonement of our Lord and Saviour, left a work behind him entitled Ὑστεραι φροντιδες, or After Thoughts, in which he denied both. Yet his proofs of his previous belief remain unanswered by himself, and unanswerable by any other man. We see that it is very possible for great and learned men to change for the worse. Therefore, although Stillingfleet, whether of his own accord, or by yielding to the teazings and menaces of others, did retract the doctrines of his Irenicum, it does not follow that all his facts and reasonings are false, or that he himself drew nearer to the truth. He renounced the Irenicum, the prelatists cry—Good. Did he answer it ? we ask. Howbeit, since Dr. Hobart has represented himself and his brother-writers, as young men, and even " striplings ;" who knows, but, upon their arriving at maturity, when they shall have sown their intellectual " wild oats," their opinion may change in a direction contrary to that of the bishop of Worcester, and that they may yet ripen into excellent Presbyterians ?

are the faithful messengers of God's word ;" answers Dr. Fulk—They " are put for the nations over which they were thought to preside," adds the venerable Mede—More follows again, with a declaration, " That no man versed in the apocalyptical style, can any wise doubt that by " angels" all the agents under their presidency are represented." And Stillingfleet, their own Stillingfleet, calls the argument of the hierarchists from these symbolical titles, a " miserable" one ; thus avenging the Presbyterian upon them, by dealing out to them in their own way, " measure for mea sure."—

To which side the scale inclines, it is not difficult to discern.

That the epistles in question are addressed to the persons designated by " stars" and " angels," in such a manner as to imply that these persons were invested with authority over the churches, is freely conceded. It is also conceded that " angel" and " star" are titles of office which belong exclusively to the ministry. Unless we greatly mistake, " stars," in the symbolical language, signify, throughout the whole Bible, " ministers of religion."

But we contend that they signify ministers of religion with regard to their general office, and not with regard to their relative dignity. Jesus Christ is a " star," the twelve apostles are " stars"—and so are the apostate clergy, figured by the " third part of the stars," which the dragon cast down with his tail to the earth. Who does not see, that the only point in which the symbol agrees to the subject in all these cases, is the common character of the religious ministry; distinction of rank being utterly disregarded? On this principle, the "stars" must mean the ministers of the churches without discrimination; every one being a "star." It is, therefore, impossible to discover under this emblem, any order of ministers to the exclusion of any other.

In this general reasoning, the hierarchy might, perhaps, concur without much prejudice to her cause. She might insist, that a symbol, common, in its own nature, to all ministers of religion, is restricted, by the conditions of the text, to a single individual, who, from the functions ascribed to him, must be a superiour officer, and not one of a college, concessus, or presbytery, having equal authority.

There is internal evidence in the passage itself, that this construction, though ingenious and acute, cannot be true. For as the "candlesticks" are emblematical of the churches, and as there is but one star to give light to each candlestick, it would follow that there was but a single minister in each of the churches; and thus the Episcopalian would overthrow himself: for without inferiour, there can be no superiour, clergy. Surely he will not say, that the bishop alone did all the preaching, gave all the instruction, and set all the example: i. e. emitted all the light on account of which ministers are called "stars." The other clergy had some share in these useful functions. They too "preached the word;" they too, taught "from house to house;" they too, "let their light shine before others." Now, one "star" being appropriated to one "church," as one candle is to one "candlestick;" it follows, from the nature of the comparison, that as one candle is the full complement of light for one candlestick; so one star is the full complement of light for one church. But the light which shone in these churches did not emanate from any individual; it emanated from a number of individuals; from the collective body of the ministers of religion. Therefore, the "star" which expresses the whole light in one of these churches, is a symbol, not of a single minister, but of her ministry collectively. It would be a darksome diocese, indeed, which should enjoy no rays of light but those which proceed from the bishop.

Let us now advert to the other symbol, viz. "Angel." This too, the hierarchists, whom we oppose, say, is "constantly applied in the book of Revelation to a single man, and never to a society or number of men."

It looks somewhat uncivil to contradict so positive an assertion; but we must contradict it; for it is not true. And if, in proving it to be false, we prove its authors either to be ignorant of the scriptures, or wilfully to misrepresent them, we cannot help it. One passage from the book of Revelation itself, overturns the very foundation upon which Cyprian and his associates have reared their "absolute demonstration."

I saw, says the prophet, another ANGEL fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to EVERY NATION, and KINDRED, and TONGUE, and PEOPLE. (Rev. xiv. 6.)

"Heaven," in this book, is the ascertained symbol of the Christian church, from which issue forth the "ministers of grace" to the nations. As the gospel is preached only by men, this "angel" who has it to preach to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," must be the symbol of a human ministry. And as it is perfectly evident that no single man can thus preach it, but that there must be a great company of preachers to carry it to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people," the angel mentioned in the text is, and of necessity must be, the symbol of that great company. We might produce other examples; but this is decisive. It shows the proposition of Potter, Cyprian, &c. to be one of the most rash and unfounded assertions into which the ardour of party ever betrayed a disputant.

Assuming it now as proved, that the term "angel" is applied in this book to a collective body, or a number of men joined in a common commission, we demand the reason of its being restricted to an individual in the epistles to the churches of Asia. Signifying "a messenger," it is in itself as applicable to any preacher of the gospel as to a diocesan bishop. If he was of old, what most of the diocesans are now, he was, of all the clergy in his diocese, the one who had the least claim to the title. To "preach the word," to "declare the whole counsel of God," to instruct the people, we are told plainly enough, are not the peculiar attributes of the bishop. By what rule of propriety should he be characterised by symbols which are foreign from his appropriate functions? by symbols which describe exactly the functions of those ministers whom, we are taught, they do not represent.*

The advocates of the hierarchy must have summoned up the most desperate resolution, when they ventured upon the declaration which we have exposed. To do them justice, they seem not to have been forsaken of those "compunctious visitings," which occasionally trouble such as suspect the righteousness of their cause. We infer this from their growing dogmatical and rather unruly in their asseverations, nearly in proportion as they find themselves beset with difficulty. Not unlike men who are accustomed to tell "a tough story," and when they perceive the credulity of their audience to be too hard pressed, back their veracity with a file of oaths. Any plain reader will observe, on a slight inspection of these epistles, that they address the angel of a particular church in the singular or plural number indifferently. Thus to the angel of the church in Smyrna, the Redeemer says, I know THY works, and tribulation and poverty, but THOU art rich—Fear none of those things which THOU shalt SUFFER. Behold the devil shall cast SOME of YOU into prison, that YE may be tried; and YE shall have tribulation ten days: be THOU faithful unto the death; and I will give THEE *a crown of life.

* "Angel of the church," is a phrase borrowed from the synagogue. "It answers to the Hebrew שליח צבור, the Legate, or delegate of the church. A name which was given in the synagogue to experienced and learned men, especially the Doctors (or teachers,) who were usually delegated to pray for the public assembly, whether in ordinary or extraordinary cases. So that by Angels of the churches must be here understood those rulers of the Christian church, whose office it was to offer up public prayers in the church, to manage sacred concerns, and discourse to the people." Vitringæ anacrisis apocalypseos, p. 25. To the same purpose speaks the profoundly learned Lightfoot. Works, Vol. I. p. 341. Fol.

We ask any dispassionate man whether all this is not addressed to the angel in Smyrna? Thou, says the text; "Thou," the angel, "shalt suffer." How? What? "Thus," saith the text, "the devil shall cast into prison some of you"—you who are signified by the angel. However, "be thou faithful unto the death;" i. e. although thou shouldest die for being faithful; "and I will give thee," whom? certainly the persecuted, "I will give thee a crown of life." This is so obvious, that, in order to evade its force, the Episcopal writers represent the epistles as addressed partly to the bishop and partly to the people.

* Rev. ii. 8—10.

"When what is said relates to the people, the style is altered; the plural number is then used." See Cyprian and Potter as above.

This gloss is contrary,

1. To the plain and natural construction of the prophet's words; which, using sometimes the singular, and sometimes the plural, number, when speaking of the angel, leads us to a simple and easy solution, by supposing that he employs that term in a collective sense, of the whole ministry of the church.

2. To their own principles which the Episcopal writers have laid down as containing an "absolute demonstration" of the prelatic dignity of these angels, viz. "That the titles of angels and stars are constantly applied in the book of Revelation to single men, and never to a society or number of men." The epistle is written to the angel in Smyrna. "Angel," say they, always signifies a single person, and never a number of men; and yet they say, that of this very epistle to the angel, part is addressed directly to the people, who are "a society or number of men."

3. To their own distinction between the emblems which point out the ministry and the churches respectively.

"The stars and angels," say they, "were not the whole church or collective body of Christians. This is proved incontestably from these considerations. The whole churches or collective body of Christians, are represented by "seven candlesticks," which are distinguished from the "seven stars" that are emblems of the angels, the bishops," &c. See above.

The distinction is just; but it is completely overthrown in their subsequent interpretations. For, in the first place, they tell us very truly, that the collective body of Christians is signified by the symbol of a "candlestick:" and in the next, that they are directly addressed in the letter sent to the angel, who is, say they, a single person: i. e. they are explicitly and formally addressed, under an appellation which is never applied to them.

4. To the known use of those scriptural emblems, "star" and "angel." These titles in the context are perfectly synonymous; whatever is meant by "star," is acknowledged to be meant by "angel." Now both these symbols depict official character; and consequently, when applied to the Christian church, cannot mean the people as distinguished from their ministers. Therefore, under the term "angel," the ministry and the people cannot be distinctly addressed.

5. To the tenour of the exhortations and promise in the text. If the "angel" is the collective body of the ministry upon whom the persecution was to fall, then the exhortations, Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer—Be thou faithful unto the death; and the promise, I will give thee a crown of life, are in harmony with the pre-monition that the Devil should cast some of them into prison. The anticipation of evil is softened by the assurance of support. But according to the Episcopal construction, the sorrow goes one way and the consolation the other: the bishop is exhorted not to fear: to be faithful unto the death. But it seems that the people only are to bear the calamity. The bishop has a glorious promise of a crown of life; but not a word to cheer his oppressed flock. Cold comfort this to the poor prisoners cooped up by the devil in a dungeon! One would think that the "cup of salvation" might have been put to the lips which were drinking deeply of the cup of sorrow. But the matter is more dexterously managed: the bishop suffers, and the people are consoled,—by proxy. A mode of suffering, we presume, to which the bishops of the present day, and many others beside them, would submit with great magnanimity. How they would relish the consolation thus administered, is another affair.

Lastly, to the authority delegated by Christ to Presbyters: We have formerly proved that every ordinary power left in the church is, in the most direct and unequivocal manner, devolved on Presbyters. And as one part of scripture cannot be repugnant to another, it is impossible that any term or expression here, in this book of the Revelation, can be rightly interpreted, which is said to lodge the whole power of government and discipline in a bishop, to the exclusion of presbyters.

We do not feel conscious of any arrogance in supposing, that after the reader, who is solicitous to know the truth, shall carefully have examined and compared the reasonings now submitted to him; and allowed them their due force on his mind, he will coincide with us in opinion, that the "angels" and "stars" in the context before us, do NOT signify single persons, but a number of men; that is, are emblems of a collective ministry, and not of diocesan bishops.

"Thus endeth the second lesson," which is concerning Cyprian's "absolute demonstration" that the angels of the seven churches of Asia were Episcopal prelates.

We now come to the third and great fact of the Hierarchy, the prelatical character of Timothy and Titus. The inquiry consists of two parts; the first, concerning their ordination, and the second, their powers.

Although the Episcopal writers argue less confidently from the first of these topics than from the second; yet it is not unimportant to their cause. For if they can prove that ordination to the ministry in the days of the Apostles was Episcopal, in their sense of the term; that is, that an officer whom they call the bishop, had the sole power of ordination, presbyters being permitted merely to express their consent—if they can prove this, it will be hard to escape from the conclusion, that the whole government of the church was prelatical. If they decline much reliance upon it, as Dr. Hobart and the Layman say they do,* their shyness must be imputed to some other cause than its insignificance; for they are not in the habit of declining very humble aid; and our former remarks will show that, though well supplied with assertions, they have no evidence to spare.

The following texts have been quoted under the present head.

For TIMOTHY.

Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, WITH THE LAYING ON OF THE HANDS OF THE PRESBYTERY. 1 Tim. iv. 14.

Wherefore I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up the gift of God which is in thee, BY THE PUTTING ON OF MY HANDS. 2 Tim. i. 6.

For TITUS.

For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting; and ordain elders in every city, AS I HAD APPOINTED THEE. Titus i. 5.

From these texts one thing is clear, viz. that both Paul and the Presbytery imposed hands on Timothy. But several questions have been started about the rest. Who constituted the Presbytery? Why were hands imposed on Timothy? Was this his consecration to the evangelical ministry? If so, what share had the apostle in the transaction, and what the presbytery? The high church construction is, that "St. Paul ordained Timothy with the concurrence of the Presbytery. By the Presbytery may be understood a number of Apostles who laid their hands on Timothy, since the Apostles, though certainly superiour to Presbyters, style themselves "Elders," or Presbyters. The Greek expositors understood the passage in this sense as well as the Greek church, both ancient and modern—since in the ordinations of this church, the Presbyters do not lay on their hands with the Bishop. Nor was it the custom in the Western church until the fourth century. But allowing that by the Presbytery is meant a number of Presbyters, it is evident, from a comparison of the two texts, that the Presbyters imposed hands, not to convey authority, but merely to express approbation. "By the putting on of my hands," "with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery." In the church of England, the Presbyters lay on their hands with the Bishops in ordination, to denote their consent."*

* Collec. p. 59, note. LAYMAN, No. V. p. 51.

As our business, at present, is not with ecclesi-

* Hobart's Festivals and Fasts. p. 25. The Greek expositors to whom he refers in the margin, are Chrysostom and Theophylact. Theophylact has copied Chrysostom, whose words are, ου περι πρεσβυτερων φησιν ενταυθα· αλλα περι επισκοπων, ου γαρ δη πρεσβυτεροι τον astical history, but with the interpretation of scripture, we pass over the allusion to the Greek and Western churches. "The evidence" that "the Presbyters imposed hands not to convey authority, but merely to express approbation," is extorted from the two prepositions "by" and "with." "By my hands," says Paul: therefore he alone ordained Timothy. "With the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery," says he again: therefore, the Presbytery merely "expressed their approbation."

In support of this "evident" difference between the agency of Paul and that of the Presbytery in the ordination, the Layman has entertained us with some rare criticism which we shall not be so unjust as to withhold from our readers.

"It is known to every Greek scholar, that dia signifies, emphatically, the cause of a thing; while meta denotes emphatically, nearness of situation, relation, connexion, επισκοπον εχειροτονουν. Chrys. ad loc. "He, the apostle, is not speaking here of PRESBYTERS, but of BISHOPS: for Presbyters did not ordain a Bishop." The eloquent Patriarch flounders sadly. He takes for granted, that Timothy was a bishop: to allow that a bishop could be ordained by Presbyters, would demolish the whole fabrick of the hierarchy. Paul had used an ugly word for their spiritual mightinesses; and so, to make short work with him, the golden-mouthed preacher flatly contradicts him. It was a "presbytery," said the apostle. It was a council of bishops, replies Chrysostom. Yet, after all, neither he nor Theophylact, have interpreted the term of Apostles. When a writer quotes authorities without consulting them, he should be wary, and be extremely cautious in mentioning names. Dr. H. was probably in haste. Had he stuck closer to Potter, he would have been less inaccurate.

agreement. It need not be observed that words are used sometimes more loosely, and sometimes more strictly. A term is often introduced in a sense different from its original and primary meaning. The two words dia and meta are opposed in the Epistles of Timothy. Well, then, the two words being opposed, and the first, as every Greek scholar knows, denoting, emphatically, the cause of a thing; the latter conveying, particularly, the idea of relation, connexion, agreement, it follows, obviously, that they are to be taken in these their appropriate senses. Our author will not venture to say that the Greek word meta is as appropriate an one as dia to express the cause of a thing. He will not so far hazard his reputation as a scholar. I assert, then, that dia signifies, particularly, the cause of a thing, and that meta is the preposition of concurrence. Nor is this invalidated by the circumstance of meta being sometimes used as dia with the genitive case. The emphatical distinction between the two words lies in the first denoting a cause, the other concurrence. Why does St. Paul carefully use the word dia in the one case, and meta in the other? Why does he not use meta in both cases? It is to be recollected too, that the passages are, in his Epistles to Timothy, relating to the same subject; and of course, the terms must be regarded as contrasted with one another. Surely the words dia and meta, as opposed, signify, the first, the cause of a thing; the last, nearness, concurrence, agreement. This is familiar to every Greek scholar, and I assert it on the authority of the best lexicons of the language. The circumstance, then, of the Apostle using a word in relation to himself, which denotes the instrumental cause, and with respect to the Presbytery, a word which, particularly as distinguished from dia, expresses agreement, shows, clearly, that the authoritative power was vested in him, and that the act, on the part of the Presbytery, was an act of mere concurrence."*

* Layman, No. V. Coll. p. 53, 54.

That Presbytery may be left without a shadow of support, these two unhappy prepositions, (δια & μετα,) (dia and meta) by and with, are doomed to the same rack on which Cyprian had formerly tortured a noun, and the Layman himself both a noun and a verb, into witnesses for the hierarchy.* It being presumed that the imposition of hands relates to Timothy's ordination, the "presbytery," whose act it was, whether composed of mere Presbyters, or of Prelates, or of Apostles, had nothing to do in the affair, but barely to express their consent; and if this appear dubious, it shall be substantiated by the deposition of dia and meta.

"It is known," says the Layman, "to every Greek scholar, that dia" (by) "signifies, emphatically, the cause of a thing; while meta" (with) "denotes, emphatically, nearness of situation, relation, connexion, agreement."†

We do not wish to be uncharitable, but, if we must judge from the instances of words, which, in this collection have been unfortunate enough to undergo his critical process, it is very hard for the Layman to tell what a Greek scholar knows. Scholars, like other classes of men, have their appropriate habits of speaking and acting: And when one who has had only a dining-room acquaintance with them, affects to be of their number, his awkward imitation betrays him in the same manner as the dialect of a foreigner distinguishes him from a native, as a prime minister would loose the reputation of a statesman by relying on annual registers, on reviews, or the gazettes, for his great political facts. No scholar would have made the Layman's indefinite appeal to "the best lexicons in the language," for settling the meaning of a disputed word. He would have produced examples from the only legitimate authorities, the original writers.

* See p. 54.—62. † Hobarts Apology, p. 154.

How the Layman would fare in such hands, we shall not conjecture: but we are sure that a very little acquaintance with Greek is sufficient to pluck away the feathers with which poor dia and meta have been made to adorn his plume.

"Dia signifies, emphatically, the cause of a thing."

For example:

It is easier for a camel to go THROUGH (dia) the eye of a needle, than, &c. Math. xix. 24.

Jesus went—THROUGH (dia) the cornfields. Mark ii. 23.

And again he entered into Capernaum, AFTER (dia) some days. Mark ii. 1.

Now what "cause" does the preposition dia express here. Does it "emphatically," as the Layman speaks, "signify the cause" of the needle's eye? of the cornfields? or of the days? or the "cause" of the camel's going through the first? of our Lord's going through the second? or of his spending the third before he went into Capernaum? When the Layman shall have found his emphatical signification of dia in these instances, he may call upon us for a hundred more

The fact is, that this preposition never signifies the cause of a thing: whatever the "Lexicons" say. It expresses the idea of transition or transmission, and has no English word to correspond with it so well as the preposition "through." Whether it is accompanied with the notion of a cause or not, must be determined by the phrase where it occurs.

But in spoiling the Layman's criticism, we acknowledge that we have not overthrown his argument. For if the imposition of Paul's hands was the medium through which, to the exclusion of the Presbytery, he alone conveyed the ministerial commission to Timothy; and if this act of his formed a precedent for all subsequent ordinations, the Layman has won, and we own Timothy to have been episcopally ordained: Whether a bishop or not, would still remain a question. These ifs, however, seem to be rather anti-episcopal.

From the words of Paul, we should conclude, that whoever or whatever else might have been concerned in this august transaction, a material part of it belonged to the Presbytery. Neglect not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, WITH THE LAYING ON OF THE HANDS OF THE PRESBYTERY. A plain reader would certainly say, that Timothy was Presbyterially ordained: as he could not well imagine that a Presbyterian himself would have chosen to word the account differently. But this would be the errour of one who had never heard what marvels can be effected by a little critical legerdemain operating upon Greek prepositions. O no! This is the very text which proves that his ordination was not presbyterial! Astonishing! I see Timothy bowing before the Presbytery. I see them imposing hands upon his head: I am told by the Apostle Paul, that the gift which was in him was given him with the laying on of their hands: and yet they did not ordain him! "No!" Had no share in his ordination! "No!" Gave him no gift at all! "No!" Verily this Layman is unceremonious in his behaviour to words; for he will either allow them no meaning at all; or else, as it may suit him, they shall mean in the mouth of an apostle, the contrary to what they ever have meant or ever shall mean, in the mouth of any other man! No ordination! No communication by the Presbytery! Why, that old Jesuit, who has foisted the Virgin Mary into every chapter of the book of Proverbs,* could not himself be more fantastical! How, in the name of common sense, is the Presbytery disposed of? Softly, zealous friend, softly. Thou shalt see. Here comes the magician: his wand shall touch the little four-lettered vocabule, "WITH," and lo, the whole Presbytery will evanish, and leave only a single ordaining hand!

"The circumstance of the apostle using a word in relation to himself, which denotes the instrumental cause," viz. dia;

* Vid. F. Q. DE SALAZAR, expositio in Proverbia.

"and with respect to the Presbytery, a word which, particularly as distinguished from dia, expresses agreement," viz. meta; "shows, clearly, that the authoritative power was vested in him; and that the act, on the part of the Presbytery, was an act of mere concurrence."

So they wrap it up! Let us try to unwrap it a little, and see whether the bundle will bear examination. So far as we can perceive, there is nothing here but a play upon words; and the argument consists in the jingle. The interpretation of the word used by the apostle, is bent and twisted in such a manner as to induce the unlettered reader to suppose that it expresses the assent of one person to the act of another. We do not object to the Layman's translating meta by "concurrence;" for according to our great English Lexicographer, "concurrence" signifies "union, association, conjunction:" "Agreement; act of joining in any design or measure"—"combination of many agents or circumstances," &c.; but popular and colloquial usage often employs it when nothing more is intended than an approbation of an opinion or a measure. It is in this sense that the Layman uses it; and it is here that his criticism puts a fraud upon his reader. We do not say that the fraud is intentional; before we can prove this, we must prove that he understands Greek; which we humbly beg leave to decline. But we shall freely give him the "eight or ten years" which his friend has craved,* in order to support his construction of meta by the proper authorities; and he shall have "the best lexicons of the language" into the bargain.

* Hobart's Apology, p. 241.

But as we do not ask for credence to our bare assertion, we shall subject the Layman's distinction between dia and meta to the test of fact.

"It is to be recollected," says he, "that the passages are in his" (Paul's) "epistles to Timothy, relating to the same subject; and of course, the terms," (viz. dia and meta,) "must be regarded as contrasted with one another."

Be it so. I open my New Testament and read, that "many signs and wonders were done BY (dia) the apostles."* Proceeding in the narrative, I read afterwards that Paul and Barnabas rehearsed all things that God had done WITH (meta) them.† Now, the Layman being judge, as "the passages relate to the same subject," viz. the miraculous works which God enabled his servants to perform, and the success with which he crowned their ministry, "the terms" dia and meta "must be regarded as contrasted with one another. The circumstance, then, of the historian using a word in relation to the apostles in general, which denotes the instrumental cause; and with respect to Paul and Barnabas, a word which, particularly as distinguished from dia, expresses agreement, shows clearly, that the authoritative power was vested in the former, and that the act, on the part of the latter, was an act of mere concurrence." In fewer words, when Peter, James, &c. wrought miracles, they did it in virtue of an authoritative power; and when Paul and Barnabas wrought miracles, they had no authoritative or instrumental agency, but merely expressed their approbation of what God did without them; although the historian has positively asserted that he did it with them. All this from the difference between dia and meta!

* Act ii. 43. πολλα τε τερατα και σημεια ΔΙΑ των αποστολων εγινετο.

† ὁσα ὁ θεος εποιησε MET' αυτων——Act. xv. 4.

Should the Layman by any means escape from this difficulty, it will be to fall into another still greater. Before he ventured upon the criticism now under review, he ought to have read, in the original, the verse which he has undertaken to criticise. There he would have found his dia and meta in the same proposition, and separated only by a single word. The gift, says Paul to Timothy, which was given thee BY (dia) prophecy, WITH (meta) *the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. That the terms relate to the same subject, is indisputable; and of course, says the Layman, they are "contrasted with one another. The circumstance, then," proceeds he, "of the apostle using a word in relation to prophecy, which denotes the instrumental cause; and, with respect to the Presbytery, a word which, particularly as distinguished from dia, expresses agreement, shows, clearly, that the authoritative power was vested in the prophecy; and that the act, on the part of the Presbytery, was an act of mere concurrence."

* 1 Tim. iv. 14.

The result of the Layman's criticism is, that Timothy had two ordinations, by two authoritative powers, viz. the prophecy, and the apostle Paul; and two concurrences of the Presbytery, viz. one with prophecy, and one with the apostle. We cannot deny that he was well ordained!

From words let us go to things, and see what the Episcopal argument will gain by the exchange. The imposition of hands on the part of the Presbytery, was an act, it is said, of "mere concurrence;" designed to express approbation, and not at all to convey the ministerial office.*

This assertion is not only without proof, but is directly in the face of all the proof which the nature of the case admits.

1. By what rule of reasoning is the very same act, viz. imposition of hands, performed at the same time, in relation to the same subject, considered as expressing the communication of authority by one of the persons engaged, and only as expressing approbation by all the rest? When certain distinctions have taken place, it is easy to invent other distinctions to justify them. But is it credible? does it belong to the nature of significant rites, that a rite signifying the conferring of power should be employed by a number of persons in a concur- rent act, and yet, with regard to all but one of them, not signify the conferring power at all?

* Hobart and the Layman, as above.

2. The advocates of prelacy are challenged to produce from the scriptures, or other authentic records of the apostolic and preceding ages, proof that imposition of hands was used to signify mere assent or approbation. To say that it might so signify, is nothing to the purpose. The point to be determined is, not what it might, but what it did, signify. If, in every other case, imposition of hands expressed authoritative communication, it must have done so in the ordination of Timothy; and to maintain that it did not, is to beg the question. The Episcopal construction violates the plainest meaning both of words and of actions. The Presbyterian construction is in perfect coincidence with both. Paul says that the gift in Timothy was given to him by prophecy, with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. It is agreed that prophecy, or prophecies which went before on Timothy, designated him as a fit person for the ministry: but did not invest him with office—did not give him the gift. Had there been nothing else but the prophecy, he would have had no commission. It was necessary that the imposition of the hands of the Presbytery should concur with the prophetical designation, or Timothy had remained a layman. The Presbytery did thus concur; they did lay their hands on Timothy, and he received his office. Now as the prophecy made no part of his ordination; it follows, that he was ordained by the Presbytery. If the gift which was in him by the imposition of Paul's hands, was his ministerial commission, that apostle had no share in it which was not common to every member of the Presbytery; or else his declaration, that Timothy was ordained by prophecy with the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery, would not be true. Nor is there any thing in his expression which might not be used by every one of his colleagues, and with peculiar propriety by himself, if, as it is not improbable, he presided at Timothy's ordination.

To exhibit this subject in another light, we propose a few questions which some of the advocates for prelacy would do no disservice to their cause by answering in such a manner as to remove the scruples they must naturally occasion.

1. Did Paul alone ordain Timothy? or was his ordination the joint act of the Presbytery? If the latter, we have a complete scriptural example of Presbyterial ordination. If the former, so that the Presbytery, by the imposition of their hands, merely testified their assent, then,

2. Were the persons who thus imposed hands on Timothy simple Presbyters, or were they apostles or prelates? If the latter, then,

3. How came Paul to appropriate to himself a power which belonged to every one of them in as full right as it could possibly belong to him? How came they to surrender this their power into the hands of an individual? And how could the imposition of Paul's hands bestow the ministerial gift, while others, possessing the same authority, did, by the very same act, at the very same time, merely declare their assent?

If the former, i. e. if those who concurred with Paul in the imposition of hands were simple Presbyters, then,

4. What ordination did Timothy receive? Was he ordained a Presbyter or a Prelate? If the former, his Episcopal character, in so far as it depends upon his ordination, is swept away; and we have not a single instance of the consecration of a prelate in all the New Testament. If the latter, then,

5. How came simple Presbyters to impose hands upon the head of a Bishop at his consecration? Or supposing these Presbyters to have been Prelates, where was Timothy's commission? By the terms of the argument, he was ordained by Paul alone; but according to the Episcopal order, which we are assured is the apostolical order, two or three bishops are necessary to ordain a bishop.*

* Επισκοπος υπο επισκοπων χειροτονεισθω ΔΥΟ η ΤΡΙΩΝ. Can. Apos. I. Apud PP. App. Tom. I. p. 442. Ed. Clerici. On this canon, Bishop Beveridge thus comments. "This right, therefore, used by the apostles themselves, and prescribed, by apostolical men, our church," meaning the church of England, "most religiously observes; and, as far as possible, it ought, beyond all doubt, to be observed every where. But when necessity, that most unrelenting mistress, shall require it, the rigour of the canon may be so far relaxed, as that a bishop may be ordained by two." Ibid p. 457.

And so poor Timothy was not ordained a bishop at all. If, in order to give him his mitre, we make the Presbytery to consist of Apostles, or men of apostolic rank, we not only prostrate the Layman's famous criticism about dia and meta, but are left without the vestige of an ordination by a prelate alone, in so far as that point is to be made out by the ordination of Timothy.* There remains nothing but an example of ordination by a Presbytery, which is all that the Presbyterians desire.

We cannot dismiss this point without remarking how our prelatical friends shift their ground.

Two things are to be proved: that Timothy was a Bishop; and, that a Bishop alone ordains. For the first, according to our Episcopal brethren, the Presbytery, who joined with Paul in laying hands on Timothy, were bona fide prelates, who, jointly with the apostle, imparted the Episcopal dignity; and so Timothy is a bishop without any more ado. But for the second, the Presbytery were not prelates; or if they were, they did not ordain jointly with the apostle; they merely expressed their approbation.

"The legs of the lame are not equal." If we adopt the first, we lose the proof of ordination by a Bishop alone. If the second, we lose the ordination of bishop Timothy. The latter makes dia show "clearly, that the authoritative power was vested in Paul," and meta, that "the act on the part of the Presbytery, was an act of mere concurrence." The former shows, with equal clearness, that the authoritative power was not vested in Paul alone; that the act on the part of the Presbytery, was not an act of mere concurrence; and that there is nothing in dia and meta to establish the contrary. When a circle and a square coincide, then shall these two arguments for prelacy be consistent with each other.

* Ordination performed by Titus shall hereafter be considered.

So much for Timothy's ordination. Now for that of Titus. Him, too, the Layman has ordained Episcopally.

"To Titus the apostle says, For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city as I had appointed thee. Here let it be observed, in passing along, that Titus is spoken of as having been ordained by the apostle: As I had appointed thee. Nothing is said of the Presbytery in this case. Paul appointed Titus to his office. And this is a conclusive circumstance for believing that the case was the same in relation to Timothy, as it is not reasonable to suppose that they were commissioned in different ways."*

We agree that the office of Timothy and Titus was the same, and that they were commissioned in the same manner. But the Layman has overshot his mark. For, as we have already stated, the advocates for the divine right of Episcopacy maintain that the ordination of a bishop by two or three others, is an apostolical institution: and that even in cases of the hardest necessity, two bishops are essential to the ordination of a third. One of two consequences is inevitable; either that Paul exercised, on this occasion, his extraordinary power, and so has set no precedent; or, if he set a precedent for ordination by a single prelate, Titus was no more than a presbyter, and could not by himself, ordain other presbyters. All this rests upon the assumption that the expression, as I had appointed thee, refers to the ordination of Titus. Another blunder. There is not a syllable about his ordination in the text. It pre-supposes his authority, and relates solely to the directions which the apostle had given him for the application of it. The word rendered, "appointed," frequently occurs in the New Testament, but always, with the construction before us, in the sense of prescribing, enjoining, commanding: and never in the sense of setting apart to an office—Thus,

* Layman, No. V. Collec. p. 56.

He COMMANDED (διεταξατο) a centurion to keep Paul. Acts xxiv. 23. Surely Felix did not then give the centurion his military commission.

As God hath distributed to every man; as the Lord hath called every one, so let him walk: and so ORDAIN I, (διατασσομαι) direct, enjoin I, in all churches. 1 Cor. vii. 17.

In the very same manner does Paul speak to Titus.

As I had APPOINTED (διεταξαμην) instructed, enjoined, thee.

The word which expresses investiture with office is quite different, as this very verse shows; and the author of Miscellanies* had remarked: but this circumstance, Dr. Hobart, though not sparing of his notes, passes over in profound silence.

We come, at length, to the decisive argument for diocesan Episcopacy—the powers exercised by Timothy and Titus. This is to silence the last battery of the Presbyterians, and reduce them to the humiliating necessity of surrendering at discretion! Really one would imagine, that the powers of Timothy and Titus are a new discovery: and that the epistles written to them by Paul, had been in the custody of the prelates alone as containing the precious charter of their rights. But the world may believe us, upon our word of verity, that we have actually read those epistles long ago; and that the demonstration, said to be therein contained, of the apostolical institution of the "sacred regiment of Bishops," has been questioned, yea and, in our judgment, confuted some handful of years before our grandfathers were born. However, Ecce iterum Crispinus! Here it is again. We shall give unto thee, reader, as Cyprian and the Layman have given it unto us. But we entreat thy patience to some preliminary matter.

We think that when the Episcopal writers appeal, with so much confidence, to the powers exercised by Timothy, they ought also to have agreed as to the office and rank of that eminent man. Yet it is a disputed point among them, at this hour, whether he was simply Bishop of Ephesus, having jurisdiction over his presbyters; or an archbishop, having bishops under him; or the lord primate of Asia, above them all. If you ask the advocates of these several opinions, what was precisely his authority? some cry one thing, and some another: for the assembly is confused; and their voices unite only in this, Great is Timothy of the Ephesians! We cannot refrain from transcribing a few remarks of the powerful and eloquent JEAN DAILLE.

* Clemens, No. I. Collec. p. 77.

"Here," we translate his own words, "Here the hierarchs, having their imagination full of their grand prelatures, of their bishoprics, their archbishoprics, and their primacies, do not fail to dream of one in these words of the Apostle. That he besought Timothy to abide still at Ephesus, signifies, if you believe them, that he made Timothy bishop of the church of Ephesus; and not only that, but even Metropolitan, or archbishop of the province; and even primate of all Asia. You see how ingenious is the passion for the crosier and the mitre; being able, in so few and simple words, to detect such great mysteries! For where is the man, who, in the use of his natural understanding without being heated by a previous attachment, could ever have found so many mitres—that of a Bishop, that of an Arch-bishop, and that of a Primate, in these two words, Paul besought Timothy to abide still at Ephesus? Who, without the help of some extraordinary passion, could ever have made so charming and so rare a discovery?* and imagine that to beseech a man to stay in a city, means, to establish him bishop of that city, Archbishop of the province, and primate of all the country? In very deed, the cause of these gentlemen of the hierarchy must be reduced to an evil plight,† since they are constrained to resort to such pitiful proofs."‡

Our readers will hardly blame Daillé for applying the epithet "pitiful," to the argument of the hierarchy for Timothy's Episcopate, when they see that her ablest and most resolute champions are at irreconcileable variance with each other on this very point: some maintaining it as perfectly con-

* Deviner une chose si belle & si rare?—

† A de mauvais termes.

‡ DAILLE' Exposition de la premiere epitre de l'Apotre Saint Paul à Timothée; en 48 sermons prononcés à CHARENTON. Serm. I. p. 22, 23. a Geneve 166I. 12mo.

This is that identical Monsieur DAILLE' whom Mr. BINGHAM and, from him, Dr. HOBART have represented as friendly to Episcopacy.* This is that JEAN DAILLE'! The prelatical commentators have played tricks with the French preacher; which, if we feel in a humour for it, we may one of these days expose.

* HOBART'S Apology, p. 94, compared with p. 99. BINGHAM'S Christian Antiquities. Vol. II. p. 799.

clusive; others rejecting it as weak and frivolous. The mere fact of this variance is a strong presumption against the former, and in favour of the latter. For although vigorous, cultivated, and candid minds may be so far warped by their wishes as to lay more stress upon an argument for them than it deserves; yet it is hardly to be supposed that such minds will attribute to an argument which, if sound, secures them the victory, much less importance than it possesses. If, then, there are to be found among the advocates of Episcopacy, men second to none of them in learning, force, and sagacity, who fairly give up the plea from Timothy and Titus, the conclusion is, that their concession is extorted against their prejudices and interest.

As a specimen of the collision which takes place, on this subject, between the most zealous supporters of prelacy, we transcribe a part of the seventh section of the Appendix to Ayton's Original Constitution of the Christian Church. It has not been in our power to compare all his quotations with the authors, but we have examined a number and they are correct.

"The chief plea and argument of the Episcopalians is taken from Timothy and Titus. But however much this is boasted of by some, as a conclusive proof for a diocesan form of church government, and superior power of Bishops to that of Presbyters; yet there is nothing adduced by them that is more violently opposed by others of them, and in which they are more egregiously divided. For some of them pretend, that the Apostle, in his Epistles to Timothy and Titus, uses the terms Bishop and Presbyter promiscuously, only to express such officers as are now called Presbyters. Of this opinion I take Bishop Hoadley to be, Dr. Whitby, Mr. Dodwell, and many others might be named.

"But how contradictory to this is the judgment of Bishop Pearson, Vindicia. Lib. 2. Cap. 13. Bishop Taylor, Episc. assert. P. 85. Bishop Burnet, in his History of the Right of Princes, Prefac. p. 15. and p. 4, 5. of the Book: and Dr. Hammond, in a variety of places. I say, how contradictory are these sentiments of those prelates to this above named? seeing they hold, that all those whom they were to ordain were proper bishops, nay, Dr. Hammond's opinion is, that Timothy and Titus were Archbishops, and had their suffragans under them; and with him bishop Bull seems to agree, when he calls Timothy Archbishop, Serm. on 2 Tim. iv. 13. And to these I could add others of the same mind. But, then as Dr. Hammond reckoned, that the Apostles ordained no mere Presbyters at the first, but only Bishops, Annot. on Acts xi. 6, 14. so Dodwell, Paræenes, p. 54. p. 13. and p. 102. p. 33. must certainly contradict him in this, when he maintains, that the Apostles at the first ordained no Bishops, but simple Presbyters only; and that there is no mention of Episcopal government in the New Testament, and that it was not established till Anno 106. But then, according to both these Doctors, there is one office in the church without scripture warrant—Presbyters, according to Dr. Hammond; and Bishops, according to Mr. Dodwell. But how will they answer to what is advanced by Bishop Burnet, which equally contradicts them both, Vindic. of the Church of Scotland, p. 355. That without Scripture warrants no new office may be instituted? Besides Dr. Hammond's conceit against Presbyters not being instituted in the New Testament, is opposed with all freedom by Mr. Maurice, Defens. p. 27. and by Bishop Hoadley, Brief Defence, p. 113. Is it possible to behold such wrangling, without being affected with a mixture both of indignation and compassion? Is it not matter of indignation, that men of judgment and learning should have such a fondness to maintain a cause that is so precarious, as to drive them into so many schemes to defend it, and every one of them contradictory to one another? And can it miss to beget compassion in the breast of every sincere Christian, that men of abilities should bestow so much time to perplex themselves and others, when their labours, rightly employed, might prove much more beneficial to the Protestant world?

"But that we may give the world a view, how inconclusive all these schemes and models are, which are taken from Timothy and Titus, I shall give some account of the minds of the Episcopalians at some length, who, when adduced, will leave no room for the Presbyterians to be in any perplexity in the defence of their establishment. The first I shall bring on the stage is the famous Willet, Synops. Papism. p. 236. 'It is most like Timothy had the place and calling of an evangelist: and the calling of evangelists and bishops, which were pastors, was divers.' To him let us join the learned Stillingfleet, who says, Irenic. p. 340. 'Such were the evangelists, who were sent sometimes into this country to put the church in order there, sometimes into another; but wherever they were, they acted as evangelists, and not as fixed officers. And such were Timothy and Titus, notwithstanding all the opposition made against it, as will appear to any who will take an impartial survey of the arguments on both sides,' &c. Nay, the jesuit Salmeron, is ashamed of this argument, for he says, Disput. 1. on 1 Tim. 'It is doubtful if Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus: for though he preached and ordained some to the ministry there, it follows not that he was the Bishop of that place; for Paul preached also there above two years, and absolved the penitents, and yet was not Bishop. Add that now and then the apostle called him away unto himself, and sent him from Rome to the Hebrews with his epistle; and in the second epistle, he commands him to come to him shortly. Timothy was also an evangelist of that order, Eph. 4.—So that Dorotheus says in his Synopsis, That Timothy preached through all Greece; but he stayed at Ephesus not to be Bishop, but that, in the constitute church of Ephesus, he might oppose the false Apostles.—It appears therefore that he was more than a Bishop, although for a time he preached in that city as a pastor, and ordained some to the ministry. Hence it is, some calls him Bishop in Ephesus.'

"Having elsewhere given the judgment of the learned Dr. Whitby at some length, all that I shall transcribe from him at this time, is a few lines of what he says in his preface to the Epistle to Titus: 'First, I assert, that if by saying Timothy and Titus were Bishops, the one of Ephesus, the other of Crete, we understand they look upon these churches or dioceses as their fixed and peculiar charge, in which they were to preside for term of life, I believe, that Timothy and Titus were not thus Bishops.' See Chap. 1 and 4.

"To fortify those who have given their assault, let me bring in Mr. Le Clerc, in his Supplement to Dr. Hammond's Annotations on the Epistle to Titus, p. 530. who says, 'The testimonies of the ancients about this matter, who judge rashly of the times of the apostles by their own, and speak of them in the language of their own age, are of little moment. And so do no more prove that Titus was the Bishop of the island of Crete, than what Dr. Hammond says, proves him to have been distinguished with the title of Archbishop.' To the same purpose the forecited Dr. Whitby says, 'The great controversy concerning this and the epistle to Timothy is, whether Timothy and Titus were indeed made Bishops; the one in Ephesus, and the Pro-consular Asia, the other of Crete, and having authority to make, and jurisdiction over so many Bishops as were in those precincts? Now, of this matter, I confess I can find nothing in any writer of the first three centuries, and not any intimation, that they bore that name.'

" The judgment of the learned Whittaker is supporting on this occasion, as well as in the most of the former, who says, Controv. 4. Q. 4. C. 2. p. 374. ' In the apostle's times there were many things extraordinary. There was another form of government in the church in the days of the apostles, and another now, is acknowledged by Stapleton : For it was then governed by the apostles, evangelists, and prophets, but now only by pastors and doctors ; the rest are all removed.' From this it may justly be inferred, that Timothy and Titus were not ordinary officers, but they being both evangelists, are not succeeded to by Bishops. And here I cannot but subjoin the judgment of Chrysostom, whom our adversaries, I hope, will not reject as an adversary. His words, as translated by Smectymnuus, are these, Paul would not commit the whole island to one man, but would have every man appointed to his charge and cure. For so he knew his labour would be the lighter, and the people that were under him would be governed with the greater diligence. For the teacher should not be troubled with the government of many churches, but only intend one, and study for to adorn that. The remark of Smectymnuus is just, Therefore this was Titus his work, not to be Bishop of Crete himself, but to ordain Elders in every city, which was an office above that of a Bishop.

" But this fortification is not able to stand ; for the remarkable Mr. Dodwell, Parœnes. Sect. 10. p. 404. attacks it most handsomely, when he says, ' But truly, that the office of [Timothy] was not fixed, but itinerary, many arguments do evince. It was required of him to abide at Ephesus, is testified by the Apostle, 1 Tim. i. 3. He was therefore, when thus demanded, an itinerary. The work of an Evangelist, 2 Tim. vi. 5. so many journeyings with St. Paul, and his name being joined in common with the Apostle, in the inscription of the epistles to the Thessalonians, are all of them arguments for this. Moreover, the apostle commands Titus only to ordain, in Crete, Presbyters in every city, Titus i. 5. He says, he was left there, that he might set in order things that were wanting. And he was a companion of the apostle when he was left. And truly, other places make it appear, that he was a companion of St. Paul, and therefore was no more restricted to any particular place than the apostle himself.' Thus the famous Dodwell. And from what has been said from so many learned Episcopalian Doctors, one may consider, how far Bishop Hall had lost his senses, when he saith with such a masterly air, Episcop. Divine Right, Sect. 4. P. 2. That if Episcopal power of ordination, and power of ruling and censuring Presbyters, be not clear in the apostle's charge to these two Bishops, the one of Crete, and the other of Ephesus, I shall yield the cause, and confess to want my senses."

" But now, to dismiss this conceit of Timothy's being Bishop of Ephesus, &c. I shall give the judgment of the learned Willet, Synops. Papism. Contr. 5. Q. 3. ' Neither can it be granted by the words of the Apostle, Lay hands suddenly on no man, &c. that Timothy had this sole power in himself; for, the apostle would not give that to him, which he did not take to himself, who associated to him the rest of the Presbyters in ordaining of Timothy. ——— It is questioned, says he, if the apostle had then constituted Timothy bishop there [Ephesus:] For, he saith, That thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine,' &c. I conclude with the judgment of the accurate Dr. Barrow, Pope's Suprem. p. 82. whose words must certainly contradict this notion concerning Timothy's Episcopate; for he says, ' Episcopacy is an ordinary standing charge, affixed to one standing place, and requiring a special attendance there; Bishops being Pastors, who, as St. Chrysostom says, do sit, and are employed in one place. Now, he that hath such a general charge, can hardly discharge such a particular office, and he is fixed to a particular attendance, can hardly look after so general a charge.' Though this is spoken with respect to the Apostles; yet it will equally hold with respect to Timothy and Titus. I think, by this time, this strong bulwark has almost lost its beautiful shapes, and formidable figures, and is not capable of doing much execution. The itinerary life of the apostles, according to Barrow, is inconsistent with that of a Bishop, and must be so likewise with that of Timothy and Titus, seeing they were not fixed residenters in any particular place, as is well observed by Mr. Dodwell: and it must conclude against them with equal force, if Dr. Brett's notion be true, that they were both of the Apostolic order."

No equitable judge would censure us for leaving these sons of the hierarchy to dash their heads against each other, and declining to give ourselves any further trouble. We are not obliged to inquire into the claim which they set up for Timothy or Titus, until they shall themselves ascertain what the claim is; nor to answer their plea, until they shall cease to quarrel about its correctness. But, instead of taking so mortifying an advantage, we shall meet the question as it is stated by Cyprian and the Layman; referring to our readers for an opinion whether or not we are afraid to have the cause tried either at Ephesus or in Crete; and under any form which our Episcopal friends shall prefer.

"In Titus i. 5." says Cyprian, "it is said by the Apostle Paul, 'For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest ordain Elders in every city." Let us contemplate the circumstances that attended this transaction, and see what inferences we can draw from it. St. Paul had planted the gospel in the island of Crete. He had made proselytes in every city who stood in need of the ministrations of Presbyters. He speaks not to Titus as if he had left him in Crete to convert the cities to the faith. He speaks as if this work was already accomplished, as if the way was paved for the establishment of the Church. These being the circumstances of the case, it appears to me that this transaction carries on its face a proof of superiority on the part of Titus to the Presbyters or elders. Will it be imagined by any reasonable man, that St. Paul had converted so many cities on this island without having ordained any elders amongst them? What! When it was his uniform and invariable practice to ordain Elders in every country in which he made proselytes? What! Could he have neglected to ordain those amongst them who were absolutely necessary to transact the affairs of the Church during his absence? Would he have left the work he had begun only half performed?

"These considerations are sufficient to convince every unprejudiced mind that there were Elders or Presbyters in the Church of Crete at the time St. Paul left Titus on that island. And if there were Presbyters, and those Presbyters had the power of ordination, why was it necessary to leave Titus amongst them in order to perform a task that might as well have been accomplished without him? If the Presbyters possessed an authority equal to that of Titus, would not St. Paul, by leaving him amongst them, have taken the surest way to interrupt the peace of the Church, to engender jealousy, and strifes, and contentions? Again. Let us view this transaction in another point of light. St. Paul had made converts, as I have said, in every city of Crete. Titus had attended him on his last visit to that island. If Presbyters were at this time considered as competent to the task of ordaining others, why did he not ordain one at any rate during his stay amongst them, and commission him instead of detaining Titus, to ordain Elders in every city? The efforts of Titus were as much wanted as his own, to carry the light of the gospel to other nations who had not received it. Why was it necessary that Titus should ordain Elders in every city? After the ordination of a few, would not his exertions have become useless, if they were able to complete the work which he had begun?

"In short, Titus seems to be entrusted with all the authority of a supreme ruler of the Church. He is directed to ordain Presbyters—to rebuke with all authority—to admonish hereticks, and in case of obstinacy, to reject them from the communion of the Church. These circumstances infallibly designate the presence of a Bishop. Accordingly we find that the united voice of ancient writers declares him to have been the first Bishop of Crete. Eusebius informs us 'that he received Episcopal authority over the Church of Crete.' So also says Theodoret, St. Chrysostom, St. Jerome, St. Ambrose. If these considerations united do not show that Titus possessed in Ephesus powers superior to those which were held by the Presbyters of those Churches, I know not what considerations would."*

And again:

"The case of Timothy alone, had we no other evidence from Scripture, would, when taken into connexion with the testimony of ancient writers, be perfectly satisfactory to me. This alone demonstrates all that we can desire. He was placed by St. Paul to superintend the Church of Ephesus. This case is even stronger than was that of Titus in Crete. It cannot be denied that there had long been Presbyters in the Church of Ephesus. Listen then to the language which St. Paul speaks in his Epistles to him, and see if it is possible that he possessed no superiority over the Presbyters of that Church. 'I besought thee,' says he to Timothy, 'to abide still at Ephesus when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine.' Would Timothy have been commissioned to charge the Presbyters to teach no other doctrine had he possessed no superiority over them? Would they not have had a right to resist any attempts at a control of this kind as an encroachment on their privileges? Again, Timothy is directed to try and examine the Deacons, whether they be blameless or not. If they prove themselves worthy, he is to admit them into the office of a Deacon; and upon a faithful discharge of that office, they are to be elevated to a higher station. 'Likewise,' says he, 'must the Deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience.' 'Let these also be first proved, and then let them use the office of a Deacon, being found blameless.' Here we find no mention made of the Presbyters of Ephesus, in the ordination of Deacons. They are not associated with him at all in the work. Does not this indicate, does it not demonstrate a superiority of power on the part of Timothy? Timothy is also exhorted to 'lay hands suddenly on no man.' There is no such thing as a recognition even of the co-operation of Presbyters with him. He seems to be the supreme and the only agent in the transaction of these affairs.

* Cyprian, No. II. Collec. p. 64, 65.

"Now, I appeal to the common sense of mankind, had the Presbyters of Ephesus possessed an authority equal to that of Timothy; had they, like him, possessed the power of ordination, would not St. Paul have recognized their agency in connexion with his? Would it not have been to treat them with improper neglect not to mention them? But what consummates our evidence on this point, and places the subject beyond all doubt, is the charge which St. Paul gives to Timothy in relation to the penal discipline he was to exercise over his Presbyters. Timothy is required to 'receive an accusation against an elder or Presbyter, only before two or three witnesses.' 'Them, (that is, those amongst the Presbyters,) that sin, rebuke before all, that others also may fear.' Can any one imagine that Timothy would have been commissioned to listen to accusations made against Presbyters, openly to rebuke them, had not his authority transcended theirs? Does not this single circumstance unquestionably establish the point of his superiority? 'The man,' says a learned and ingenious writer of our country, 'who shall not find a Bishop in Ephesus, will be puzzled to find one in England.'*

"I cannot conceive of a case that could be more clear and unequivocal, that could speak more loudly to the common sense of mankind, than the case of Timothy in Ephesus. He is obviously intrusted with apostolic authority. Every thing which the Apostle could do in his own person, he commissions Timothy to perform during his absence. He is to adjust the affairs of the church; he is to prove and examine Deacons; he alone is to ordain them; he alone is recognized in the performance of the task of ordaining Elders or Presbyters; he possesses perfect control over these Presbyters. If they are guilty of any offences or misdemeanours, he is to inflict punishment upon them. I cannot conceive of a case more satisfactory in proof of the apostolic original of the Episcopal form of Church government. Had Timothy been of the same order with the Presbyters of Ephesus, can it be imagined that the Apostle would, by elevating him to such high privileges amongst them, have endangered the peace of the Church, have taken a step so well calculated to excite discontent and dissatisfaction amongst the remaining Presbyters or Elders? This cannot be imagined. Timothy was then undeniably intrusted with Episcopal authority in the Church of Ephesus; he was the Bishop of that place. This is proved by the concurring voice of ancient writers. Eusebius tells us 'that he was the first Bishop of the province or diocese of Ephesus.' The anonymous author of his life in Phocius says, 'that he was the first that acted as Bishop in Ephesus, and that he was ordained Bishop of the metropolis of Ephesus by the great St. Paul.' In the council of Chalcedon twenty-seven bishops are said to have succeeded in that chair from Timothy. To prove the same point goes the testmony of St. Chrysostom and Theodoret; and in the apostolical constitutions we are expressly told, that he was ordained Bishop of Ephesus by St. Paul."*

* Dr. Bowden, in his answer to Dr. Stiles.

The Layman speaks to the same purpose.

"In whom was the power of ordination vested in the Churches of Ephesus and Crete? Clearly in Timothy and Titus alone. Them alone the apostle addresses, and them alone he speaks of as ordaining Elders, or as committing the things they had received from him to faithful men, capable of teaching others. Is this not utterly inconsistent with the Presbyterian system? What individual among them could with propriety be addressed as the apostle addresses Timothy and Titus? Not one. The power among them is in a numerous body of equals, lest there should be 'lords over God's heritage.' The power, in Ephesus and Crete, was in Timothy and Titus, to whom the Presbyters were subject, liable to be tried and punished for misconduct. It is on this plain statement of facts, relative to Ephesus and Crete, as well as to other churches, taken in connexion with the uniform and uninterrupted testimony of the church universal for fifteen hundred years, that Episcopalians rest their cause. They have never endeavoured to derive arguments from the names made use of. This has been the practice, exclusively, of the advocates of parity. Driven from the ground of fact, not able to deny that Timothy and Titus were supreme Governors in the churches of Ephesus and Crete, possessing alone the power of ordination, they say that Timothy is called a Presbyter, and was therefore upon a level with those very elders whom he ruled, whom he could control as to the doctrines they preached, whom he had power to try and to punish!"†

* Cyprian, No. III. Collec. p. 74, 75.

† Layman, No. V. Collec. p. 56.

"It is very easy," says he, "to see why the advocates of parity would exclude from view the situation of Timothy in the church of Ephesus, since it carries absolute death to their cause. Is it an immaterial circumstance that Timothy ruled the whole church of Ephesus, both clergy and laity, the Elders or Presbyters being subject to his spiritual jurisdiction? Is it an immaterial circumstance that Timothy alone exercised the power of ordaining Ministers, and thus of conveying the sacerdotal authority? What then becomes of the doctrine of parity? Destroyed, utterly destroyed. The Church of Ephesus, planted by St. Paul, and placed, by that Apostle, under the government of Timothy, was constructed upon a totally different principle. It had, in Timothy, a Bishop, possessing jurisdiction over the other clergy, and exercising all the powers which are claimed for the Bishops of the church now. Is it of no consequence that the ancients, who speak on the subject, unanimously represent Timothy as the first Bishop of Ephesus? What says Eusebius? 'He was the first Bishop of the province or diocese of Ephesus.' Eccl. Hist. Bib. iii. chap. 4. What says Chrysostom? 'It is manifest Timothy was intrusted with a whole nation, viz. Asia.' Hom. 15th in 1 Tim. v. 19. Theodoret calls him the Apostle of the Asiatics. The Apostolical constitutions expressly tell us that he was ordained Bishop of Ephesus by St. Paul; and in the council of Chalcedon, twenty-seven Bishops are said to have succeded him in the government of that Church.

"We are perfectly safe, then, so far as relates to Timothy, in resting our cause upon the situation which he occupied at Ephesus, and on the powers which he exercised there. The constitution of the Church of Ephesus was undeniably Episcopal. This part of the subject the advocates of parity do not choose to meddle with, running off constantly to the term Presbytery, that poor word being the chief basis of their cause."*

* Proscript to the LAYMAN, No. VIII. Collec. p. 81.

And thus the Episcopal arm has "carried death to our cause!" And thus "the doctrine of parity" is "destroyed, utterly destroyed!"

Not so fast, good Mr. Layman. We have an objection or two to such a settlement of our affairs; and shall take the liberty of stating them.

The reader will remember that we confine ourselves, at present, to the Scriptural argument; and therefore shall not notice any quotations from the Fathers. One thing at a time; and every thing in its place.

This is the argument which the Layman tells us "the advocates of parity do not choose to meddle with." If it be so, the terrour is needless. But the assertion is only a polemical flourish, such as the Layman is accustomed to make for the entertainment of his friends: the fact, as usual, being quite the other way. For if he will be at the trouble, for the first time, as we presume, in his life, to inspect the writings of the advocates of parity at any period from the reformation to this day, he will find that they have not only "meddled" with his argument, but so mauled and maimed it, so battered and crushed it, that even skilful diocesan doctors have given it up for dead, and wondered at that delirious fondness which, instead of decently interring it, insisted upon keeping it above ground. Its ghost, however, seems disquieted, and walks in company with the Layman and Cyprian, to frighten the Presbyterian women and children—We must lay it.

Merriment apart—What do these long extracts, with their glowing interrogations, prove? Why, that Timothy and Titus were superior to Presbyters! Who denies it? "What! do you allow that they had, severally, the power of ordaining to the ministry, by their sole authority?" Yes, we do! That they had authority to inquire into the doctrines taught by Presbyters?" Yes. "To coerce the unruly?" Yes. "To expel the heretical?" Yes—We never thought of disputing it—"Then, certainly, they were diocesan Bishops!" C'est une autre affaire, Monsieur. That is another point. We admit the premises here stated, but deny the conclusion. Timothy and Titus could do all these things without being diocesan Bishops. An apostle could do them in virtue of his apostolic office: an evangelist, as Timothy, and consequently, Titus, undoubtedly was,* could do them in virtue of his office as an evangelist; and yet be very unlike a diocesan bishop. And to infer that Timothy and Titus were bishops in the prelatical sense of the term, because they enjoyed a pre-eminence and an authority which they might enjoy without being such bishops at all, is to abuse the understanding of the reader. Our opponent ought to prove not only that they exercised the powers enumerated, but that they did so as ordinary officers in whom a precedent was set for the future government of the church. He must prove that their powers were not an appendage of their special and extraordinary character, like the powers peculiar to the apostolic character. This he neither has done, nor is able to do: and thus the boasted demonstration of Episcopacy from the history of Timothy and Titus, is a mere begging of the question—taking for granted the very thing in dispute.

* 2 Tim. iv. 5. "Do the work of an EVANGELIST."

Let us apply this all conquering argument to other cases which appear to be perfectly parallel.

Episcopal argument.

Titus ordained elders in every city—Therefore Titus was Bishop of Crete.

Parallelism.

Paul and Barnabas ordained elders in every church, to wit, in Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, at least*—Therefore Paul and Barnabas were joint Bishops of Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch.

Episcopal argument.

Timothy instructed and charged the Ephesian elders—Therefore he was Bishop of Ephesus!

Parallelism.

Paul instructed and charged the Ephesian elders†—Therefore PAUL was Bishop of Ephesus.

*Act. xiv. 20, 21. 23.

† Act. xx. 17, &c.

Episcopal argument.

Timothy had power to inflict censure on Presbyters, and even to excommunite heretics—Therefore Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus.

Parallelism.

Paul had power to excommunicate offenders in the Corinthian church*—Therefore Paul was Bishop of Corinth.

The parallel might be run further: but the foregoing will evince, that the very same mode of reasoning which proves Timothy to have been Bishop of Ephesus, and Titus of Crete, will also prove every one of the Apostles to have been bishop of every place where he exercised any of those functions which the Episcopal church has restrained to her prelates. This her advocates know to be absurd; and so does all the world beside. And yet let them show, if they can, that our argument for the diocesan ubiquity of the apostles, is not fully as fair and as conclusive as their own for the bishopricks of Timothy and Titus; and is not founded on the very same principles.

There is nothing else in the Layman or Cyprian, which has even the shadow of an argument, unless it be such suggestions as these:

"Will it be imagined by any reasonable man, that St. Paul had converted so many cities on this island," (Crete,) "without having ordained any elders amongst them? What! when it was his uniform and invariable practice to ordain elders in every country in which he made proselytes? What! could he have neglected to ordain those amongst them who were absolutely necessary to transact the affairs of the church in his absence? Would he have left the work he had begun only half performed?"*

* 1 Cor. v. 5.

Cyprian sets himself down in his study at Albany, and, knowing infinitely more than any author sacred or profane has told him, first determines what the Apostle ought to have done seventeen hundred and fifty years ago in Crete: next, very wisely concludes that Paul, being also a wise man, actually did as he, Cyprian, has laid down and determined; then, furnishes the churches of Crete with Presbyters; and, wanting still more, manufactures Titus into a Bishop to supply the deficiency. Excellent! But where did Cyprian get his facts? Where did he learn so positively what was Paul's "uniform and invariable practice," in the article of ordination? He ought to have been cautious of affronting his old guide, whose account of Paul's "practice," is entirely different from his own.

"One qualification for a Bishop was, that he should not be (Νεοφυτος) a novice; that is, one newly converted; time being required to prove men before they could be intrusted with the care of the church. And therefore the Apostles used not to ordain ministers in any place before the SECOND time of their coming thither—Sometimes, when they had no prospect of returning, they gave others a commission to ordain ministers. For which reason Titus was left in Crete by St. Paul to ordain ministers in all cities. But there will scarce be found any instance of their ordaining ministers at the first time of their coming to any place."*

* CYPRIAN, as above.

It was rather bold in Cyprian to chastise the Archbishop of Canterbury, whom on other occasions he so implicitly follows, for being ignorant of Paul's "uniform and invariable practice:" but there is something bolder behind: for, if we mistake not, the rector's rod has reached the back of the Apostle himself. He broadly insinuates, that Paul could not, without culpable negligence, have omitted to create officers who were necessary to transact the affairs of the church in his absence; and that had he done so, he would have left his work only half performed. Now it so happens that Paul, according to his own testimony, did not furnish the churches in Crete with the requisite officers, or else he left Titus to ordain such as were not absolutely necessary—he did actually leave the work he had begun unfinished; whether only "half performed," or one third, or two thirds, he does not say; but so much was undone as to demand the stay of Titus to complete it. The express terms of his commission are, "That thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting." or, as the margin of our English version has it, the things that are "left undone,"* and one of these things, as the very next words indicate, was the ordination of Presbyters—"and ordain Elders in every city." Cyprian's assumption, therefore, that Paul ordained Presbyters in Crete, is without a particle of evidence. There is not a syllable in the whole narrative, from which we can infer that there was a single Presbyter in the island at his departure. The contrary inference is much the more natural. If Titus was instructed to ordain Presbyters in every city, the presumption is, that none had been ordained hitherto. For, to turn the edge of Cyprian's weapon against himself, it is very improbable that the Apostle in organizing the several churches, would begin to ordain Presbyters; would stop in the middle of his business; hie off to another place; do the same sort of half work there; and so from city to city; and then send Titus upon a travelling tour to compensate for the deficiencies occasioned by his haste, his negligence, or his whim. But so it is. Titus shall be Bishop of Crete. The proof of his title will fail if there be no Presbyters there—Well, then, there shall be Presbyters there, or else Paul shall be convicted of neglecting his duty:—But Paul did not neglect his duty; therefore there were Presbyters in Crete when he left it; therefore Titus was a Bishop. Excellently well reasoned, Mr. Rector! And so—"Fair play," interrupts an

* Potter. Discourse on Church Government, p. 101, 102.

* τα λειποντα.

Episcopal voice, "it does not follow from the representation of Cyprian, that Paul ordained some elders in every city; and left Titus to ordain the rest. His words will bear another meaning: viz. that the full complement of Presbyters were ordained in some cities, but none at all in others: and that Titus was directed to ordain in these, which would not have been necessary, had Presbyters possessed the power of ordination: seeing that those of one district might have ordained for another, as is done at this day by the Presbyterians. And so, Mr. Reviewer, you are still in the wrong, and Titus is a Bishop."

Not yet, if you please, dear Sir. Allowing your premises, your conclusion is not good. The Presbyters newly ordained had abundance of occupation, with very little experience. A proper choice of officers in the first instance was all important to the infant churches. Titus had superiour qualifications for making a wise selection; he could also resolve many difficulties which might have been too hard for others. He was deputed by the Apostle to set every thing in order through the island, that when he should be gone the stated officers might have less trouble. In ordaining Presbyters he was doing the work of an Evangelist. The churches were organized in the best manner, and with the greatest expedition; while the Presbyters were permitted to superintend, without distraction, the flocks just committed to their care. There is no example of the Apostle's calling away Presbyters from their charges immediately after their erection, and sending them round the country to ordain others. This was the appropriate employment of the apostles themselves, and their assistants, the evangelists. They established the evangelical order, and consigned it to the ordinary ministry. Presbyters, therefore, might have been ordained in some cities, (although this is a mere supposition;) Titus might, notwithstanding, ordain others in the remaining cities, and yet not be Bishop of Crete. And certainly if his ordaining some elders proves him to have been Bishop of that island; Paul's ordaining some, proves him also to have been her Bishop.

Having exposed the weakness and vanity of the argument drawn for diocesan Episcopacy from the examples of Timothy and Titus, we might rest the cause here: but we advance a step further, and offer, what no laws of discussion exact from us, to establish the negative. That is, the proof, as we have manifested, that they were such Bishops, having miserably failed, we shall assign reasons for our conviction that they were not.

1. The very terms of their commission favour us.

What does Paul say? That he gave Ephesus to Timothy, and Crete to Titus, as their regular and permanent charges? No: nothing like it. The former staid, at the Apostle's request, to resist the inroads of false doctrine, which had begun to infect some of the public teachers. The latter to finish the organization of the churches begun by the Apostle himself. Each, then, had a specific charge, relating not to the government of settled churches, but to their preparation for it; or to the correction of abuses for restoring and preserving their purity. In both cases the charge was temporary. Paul seized these occasions to furnish his substitutes with written directions containing a manual of general instruction to them, and through them to the future ministry; and, with such an object in view, it was perfectly natural for him to compress into his instructions so great a compass of matter.

2. Paul's mode of addressing Timothy implies that Ephesus was not his peculiar charge. I BESOUGHT thee, says he, to abide still at Ephesus. A strange formula of appointment to a man's proper station! it carries a strong and evident implication, that Timothy remained there not because it was his diocese, but to gratify the apostle by attending to the exigencies of the public service. It bespeaks reluctance in Timothy to stay behind; Paul had to entreat him. All which, again, is entirely natural upon the supposition of his being the apostle's companion and assistant in planting churches: but offensive and monstrous upon the supposition of his being bishop of Ephesus.

"For why," says DAILLE', beseech a Bishop to "remain in his diocese? Is it not to beseech a man to stay in a place to which he is bound? I should not think it strange to beseech him to leave it, if his service were needed elsewhere. But to beseech him to abide in a place where his charge obliges him to be, and which he cannot forsake without offending God and neglecting his duty, is, to say the truth, not a very civil entreaty; as it plainly presupposes that he has not his duty much at heart, seeing one is under the necessity of beseeching him to do it."*

This is the language of good sense—No squeezing; no twisting; no forcing; all which the hierarchy must do when she puts into the mouth of Paul such an awkward, bungling speech as, I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus;—for—"I constituted thee bishop of Ephesus." We shall, however, suggest an improvement, for which we look for the benedictions of some gentlemen in lawn; viz. That Timothy being Bishop of Ephesus, and relishing confinement to his charge so little as to lay the Apostle under a necessity of beseeching him to stay in it, affords the best possible precedent and plea for priests and Bishops who had rather be detected any where than in their parishes and dioceses—except—at tything time.

3. "If Timothy was bishop of Ephesus, it must be when the first epistle was written. For it is in that epistle in which he is said to receive his pretended charge of exercising his Episcopal power in ordination and jurisdiction. But now this first epistle was written when Paul was at Macedonia, as the learned, both new and old, Papists and Protestants, agree. And it was after this when Paul came to Miletum accompanied with Timothy, and sends for the elders of the Church of Ephesus unto him, and commends the government of the Church unto these Elders, whom he calls Bishops. Now surely if Timothy had been constituted their Bishop, (in the sense of our adversaries,) the Apostle would not have called the elders Bishops before their Bishop's face, and instead of giving a charge to the Elders to feed the flock of Christ, he would have given that charge to Timothy, and not to them: and no doubt he would have given some directions to the Elders how to carry themselves towards their Bishop. And because none of these things were done, it is a clear demonstration to us, that Timothy was not at that time Bishop of Ephesus.

* Daille', ci-dessus, p. 23.

"To avoid the force of this argument, there are some that say, that Timothy was not made Bishop of Ephesus till after Paul's first being a prisoner at Rome, which was after his being at Miletum. But these men, while they seek to avoid the Scylla of one inconvenience, fall into the Charybdis of another as great. For if Timothy was not made Bishop till Paul's first being at Rome, then he was not Bishop when the first Epistle was written to him (which all agree to be written before that time.) And then it will also follow, that all that charge that was laid upon him, both of ordination and jurisdiction, and that entreating of him to abide at Ephesus, was given to him not as to the Bishop of Ephesus, (which he was not,) but as to an extraordinary officer, sent thither upon special occasion, with a purpose of returning when his work imposed was finished. From both these considerations we may safely conclude,

"That if Timothy were neither constituted Bishop of Ephesus before Paul's first being prisoner at Rome, nor after; then he was not constituted Bishop at all. But he was neither constituted Bishop before nor after, &c. Ergo, not at all."*

By this time we trust the reader is satisfied that Timothy was not Bishop of Ephesus; and, as it is agreed that his functions and those of Titus were alike, the conclusion is, that the latter was not Bishop of Crete. What were they then? We answer, they were extraordinary officers, known in the Apostolic church by the name of EVANGELISTS; and employed as travelling companions and assistants of the Apostles, in propagating the gospel.

For this purpose their powers, like those of the Apostles, were extraordinary; their office too was temporary; and therefore their superiority over Presbyters is no precedent nor warrant for retaining such superiority in the permanent order of the church. That such was the nature of the office of an evangelist, we have testimony which our Episcopal brethren will not dispute—the testimony of bishop Eusebius.

* Jus divinum ministerii Anglicani. p. 65, 66 4to. 1654.

This celebrated historian tells us, that even in the second century there were disciples of the apostles, "who every where built upon the foundations which the apostles had laid: preaching the gospel, and scattering the salutary seeds of the kingdom of heaven over the face of the earth. And, moreover, very many of the disciples of that day travelled abroad, and performed the work of EVANGELISTS; ardently ambitious of preaching Christ to those who were yet wholly unacquainted with the doctrine of faith, and to deliver to them the scripture of the divine gospels. These, having merely laid the foundations of the faith, and ORDAINED OTHER PASTORS, committed to them the cultivation of the churches newly planted; while they themselves, supported by the grace and co-operation of God, proceeded to OTHER COUNTRIES AND NATIONS. For even then, many astonishing miracles of the divine spirit were wrought by them."*

Eusebius has used the very expression of Paul to Timothy, viz. the work of an evangelist; and if the reader compare his description of that work with the epistles to Timothy and Titus, and with their history as it may be gathered from the New Testament, he will perceive the most exact accordance. That is, he will perceive the work of an evangelist, like the work of an apostle, to have been altogether extraordinary and temporary.

* EUSEBII, His. Eccles. Lib. III. c. 37. ed. Reading, T. I. p. 138.

Paul took up Timothy at Lystra,* according to the chronology of our bibles, in the year of Christ, 52. He accompanied the apostle in his travels; for at the close of the next year, 53, he was with him at Berea, and staid there when Paul was sent away by the brethren.† By the persons who conducted Paul he received a message to come to him at Athens; but did not join him, as appears, till he was at Corinth,‡ the year after, 54. The next two years he made a part of the apostle's retinue; was with him when he wrote both his Epistles to the Thessalonians;‖ and, at the close of that period, was sent, with Erastus, into Macedonia, anno 56.§ Three years after he was despatched to Corinth:¶ and the next, anno 60, had returned, and was with Paul when he wrote his second Epistle to the church in that city. He was one of the seven distinguished personages who composed the apostle's train that same year, when he left Greece and went into Asia.

It was in this very journey that Paul sent for the elders of Ephesus to Miletum, and laid upon them that solemn charge to feed the flock over which the Holy Ghost had made them overseers.††

* Act. xvi. 1—4.
† xvii. 14.
‡ Act. xviii. 5.
‖ 1 Thess. i. 1. 2 Thess. i. 1.
§ Act. xix. 1. 10. 22.
¶ 1 Cor. iv. 17.
 2 Cor. i. 1.
†† xx. 28.

Timothy was there,* and if Bishop of Ephesus at all, must have been appointed either then or before. For as Paul never saw the Ephesian brethren afterwards,† he never had afterwards an opportunity of ordaining a Bishop over them. If Timothy were their diocesan already, he had been very little with them, as the narrative evinces. And is it not strange that the whole of the apostle's charge should be addressed to the Presbyters, and not a syllable to their Bishop, nor to them on their duty to him? On the other hand, if he was then ordained to his see, is not the silence of Paul on the subject of their mutual duties equally mysterious? That he should address them as having the oversight of the flock; when the fact was that it belonged not to them but to Timothy, and should do this to their Bishop's face without recognizing his pre-eminence in the most distant manner?

They who can swallow all this, when they are boasting of the scriptural evidence that Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus, have a most happy knack at self-persuasion! We own that our credulity does not contain a passage for so large a camel!

But let us see what becomes of Timothy. Whether he constantly attached himself afterwards to the person of Paul we know not; but we do know that he was with him when a prisoner at Rome, anno 64, and shared in his bonds.‡

Let any sober man look at this itinerant life of

* 2 Cor. v. 5. 13. † v. 25. 38. ‡ Heb. xiii. 23.

Timothy, and ask whether his occupations resembled those of a diocesan Bishop? Whether there is even the shadow of a presumption that he had a fixed charge? And whether there is not just as good evidence of his being Bishop of Berea, of Corinth, or of Thessalonica, as of Ephesus?

Titus is in the same situation. In the first chapter of Paul's epistle to him, the object of his stay at Crete is specified. The last chapter declares it to have been temporary; for Paul mentions his design of sending another to take his place; directs him to come without delay to him at Nicopolis; and to bring with him Zenas and Apollos.* Whence, by the way, it is clear that Titus had coadjutors in Crete. For Apollos was an eloquent preacher of the gospel; and in estimation near the apostles themselves.†

On this point, the INQUIRER, in the collection under review, p. 132, had asked,

"Since Paul sent for Titus, after he had "set in order the things that were wanting," to come to Nicopolis, took him along with him to Rome, and then sent him into Dalmatia, may not Titus be properly called an Evangelist; or a travelling rather than a diocesan Bishop?"

A very reasonable and modest question, one would think. But Dr. Hobart, in his note, calls upon Bishop Hoadley to shut the mouth of the Inquirer.

"Let Bishop HOADLEY answer this inquiry, and silence the only objection which the anti-Episcopalians can bring against the evident superiority of Timothy and Titus over the other orders at Ephesus and Crete, that they were extraordinary officers, Evangelists, travelling Bishops. 'It is of small importance whether Timothy and Titus were fixed Bishops, properly so called or not. Perhaps at the first plantation of churches there was no such necessity of fixed Bishops as was found afterwards; or perhaps at first the superintendency of such persons as Timothy and Titus was thought requisite in many different churches, as their several needs required. If so, their office certainly was the same in all churches to which they went; and ordination a work reserved to such as they were, persons superior to the settled Presbyters. But as to Ephesus and Crete, it is manifest that Timothy and Titus were to stay with the churches there, as long as their presence was not more wanted at other places: And, besides, if they did leave these churches, there was as good reason that they should return to them to perform the same office of ordination when there was again occasion, as there was at first, why they should be sent by St. Paul to that purpose. Nor is there the least footstep in all antiquity, as far as it hath yet appeared, of any attempt in the Presbyters of Ephesus or Crete, to take to themselves the offices appropriated in the forementioned Epistles, to a superior order of men.' Hoadley's Def. of Episc. ch. i.--Ed."

* Tit. iii. 12, 13. † 1 Cor. i. 12. ii. 6.

The anti-Episcopalians do not, so far as we understand them, deny the "superiority of Timothy and Titus over the other orders at Ephesus and Crete." But they deny the inferences which the jure divino prelatists draw from that superiority, viz. 1. therefore, Timothy was Bishop of Ephesus, and Titus of Crete; and 2. therefore Diocesan Episcopacy is of apostolic institution. These things they deny. They contend that a ministry extraordinary and temporary cannot be a rule for a ministry which is ordinary and permanent—that functions which, like those of the apostles and evangelists, admitted of no fixed charges, cannot be a model for a sytem of fixed charges, as diocesan Episcopacy undoubtedly is—that the method pursued in founding churches is no precedent for governing them when founded. It would be, in their estimation, quite as fair and as reasonable, to infer the form of government prescribed for a conquered country, from the measures adopted by the invaders for effecting and completing the conquest. Or to deduce the powers and jurisdiction of the different departments in a civil constitution, from the powers of those who set it up. This would be most fallacious reasoning; and the whole world would agree in rejecting it as not only false but extremely dangerous. Yet it is precisely the fallacy of the Episcopal reasoning from the powers of Timothy and Titus to those of ordinary rulers in the church. No. When we inquire who are the fixed officers, and what is the fixed order of the church? we must inquire, not what apostles and evangelists did in executing their peculiar trust; but what officers and order they fixed in the churches planted by their care. This, and this alone, can be our pattern. In the history of their proceedings we have the most incontestable evidence of their ordaining Presbyters in fixed charges. But we challenge all the advocates for Episcopacy to produce a single example of their assigning a fixed charge to any officer above a Presbyter; or of their exercising, without immediate inspiration in any settled church, a single act of power which they refused to Presbyters. When Hoadley tells us that fixed charges might not be so necessary in those days as afterwards, he confesses his inability to prove either that Timothy and Titus were diocesan bishops; or that diocesan Episcopacy has an apostolic sanction. For if it were not, as a system of fixed charges, necessary then, the apostles did not then establish it. If they did not then establish it, they never established it at all; for it cannot be pretended that they left instructions for its introduction afterwards. And if it was not then instituted, we reject its claim; if not then necessary, we must have better authority than the prelates themselves to satisfy us that it has been necessary at any period since. Hoadley, therefore, with his ifs and perhaps, instead of silencing our objection, has confirmed it. We drove the nail, and my lord of Winchester has most obligingly clenched it. Dr. Hobart has our permission to draw it at his leisure.

We finish this scrptural view with observing, that whatever may be the difficulty of Dr. Bowden, we can see prelates in England without going to Ephesus or Crete for spectacles: and that if no more of prelacy had prevailed in the one, than the scriptures show to have existed in the other, it had been infinitely better, at this day, for the most precious interests of Old England.

In an early stage of this review, we joined issue with our Episcopal brethren upon a proposition of the Layman, viz. "The question of Episcopacy is a question of fact, to be determined by a sound interpretation of the sacred volume." We not only consented, but insisted, that the question should be decided by the scripture alone.* We closed the scriptural argument in our last number, and therefore, have closed the argument upon the merits of the case. God's own word must contain the law of his own house. The idea cannot be admitted for a single moment, that those master-principles, without which there could be no Christian order, nor any system of instituted worship, are left unsettled in the rule of faith. Whatever is to govern our consciences must have its foundation here, and a foundation deep and strong. We think we have demonstrated that the Episcopal claim has no such foundation. Who set up the hierarchy, is a question not worth the expense of a thought, seeing God has not appointed it in his word. When we follow its advocates to the ground of ecclesiastical history, we yield them a courtesy which they have no right to expect. The instant we cross the line of inspiration, we are out of the territory where the only rightful tribunal is erected, and where alone we shall permit ourselves to be tried.

However, as the argument which prelacy derives from the testimony of the fathers, is in truth her best argument; let us pay it the compliment of an examination. Thus she states it from the mouth of a bishop:

* See page 39.

"Is it not reasonable to suppose that the primitive Fathers of the church must have been well acquainted with the mode of ecclesiastical government established by Christ and his apostles? Now, their testimony is universally in our favour. What course, then, have the enemies of Episcopacy for the most part pursued? Why, they have endeavoured by every art of misrepresentation to invalidate this testimony of the Fathers. Ignatius was born before the death of St. John. Seven of his Epistles have been proved by Bishop Pearson to be genuine, to the satisfaction of the whole learned world. In these Epistles he repeatedly mentions the three orders of Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons, and speaks of the order of Bishops as necessary in the constitution of every Christian church. All this has been done; and still, the Presbyterian teachers mislead the people, by artfully insinuating that none of the writings are genuine which go under the name of Ignatius. Another artful method pursued by our opponents is to collect all the errors into which the Fathers have fallen, with respect to particular points of doctrine; to paint these errors in the blackest colours; and when they have thus prejudiced the minds of the people against them, boldly to go on to the preposterous conclusion, that the testimony of these Fathers is not to be regarded when they stand forth as witnesses to a matter of fact. But is this fair dealing? May not a man of sincerity and truth be liable to errors, as to matters of opinion; and still be a true witness, as to things which he has seen and heard?

"Pursuing the usual mode of artful misrepresentation, our Miscellanist has endeavoured to represent Jerome as favouring the Presbyterian scheme of church government; and with the same spirit, he abuses the church of England as too nearly bordering on Popery. After seeing what has been published on these subjects, if your opponent has any spark of modesty remaining in his bosom, he will never produce the testimony of Jerome in support of his cause."†

Thus, from the mouth of a priest:

"Here let me appeal to the common sense of every unprejudiced reader, to bear witness to the truth of the following proposition.

"If we had only obscure hints given us in scripture of the institution of this form of government by the Apostles, and if at a very early period—as soon as any distinct mention is at all made of the subject, this appears to be the only form of government existing in the church, have we not the strongest possible presumption, have we not absolute demonstration, that it was of Apostolic original? Who were so likely to be acquainted with the intentions, with the practices, with the institutions of the Apostles, as their immediate successors? If, then, we should admit for a moment, (and really it is almost too great an outrage against sound reasoning, to be admitted even for a moment;) I say, if we should admit, for the sake of argument, that "the Classical or Presbyterial form of church government was instituted by Christ and his Apostles," at what period was the Episcopal introduced? When did this monstous innovation upon primitive order find its way into the church of Christ? At what period did the Bishops make the bold and successful attempt of exalting themselves into "lords in God's heritage." These are questions which the advocates of parity have never yet been able to answer, which they never will be able to answer. They tell us, indeed, of a change that must have taken place at an early period, that Episcopacy is a corrupt innovation; but they can produce no proof on which to ground these bold assertions. They are countenanced, in these assertions, by none of the records of these times that have been transmitted to us. It is a mere conjecture, a creature of the imagination. It is conjectured that this change took place immediately after the Apostolic age. It must be that this change took place, or Presbyterian principles cannot be maintained. Thus a mere conjecture on their part is to overbalance the most solid and substantial proofs on ours. In order to follow these aerial adventurers in their excursions, we are to desert the broad and solid bottom of facts, and launch into the regions of hypothesis and uncertainty.

† Cornelius, Collec. p. 135.

"We say, then, and I hope it will be well remembered, that from the earliest information which is given us concerning the institutions and usages of the Christian church, it undeniably appears, that there existed in it the three distinct orders of Bishops, Presbyters, and Deacons. We say, that this circumstance amounts to demonstrative evidence, that these three orders were of divine institution—were of Apostolic appointment."—"But we do not stop here. We maintain that to suppose the form of government in the church of Christ to have been so fundamentally altered at this time, is the wildest imagination that ever entered into the head of man. Let us contemplate the circumstances of this case.

"It is supposed that Christ and his Apostles instituted originally but one order of ministers in his church, equal in dignity and authority. It is imagined, that immediately after their death, a number of aspiring individuals abolished this primitive arrangement, elevated themselves to supreme authority in the church of Christ. Concerning the time at which this innovation was effected, the advocates of Presbyterianism are by no means agreed. The most learned among them, however, admit that it must have taken place before the middle of the second century, about forty or fifty years after the times of the Apostles. BLONDEL allows that Episcopacy was the established government of the church within forty years after the Apostolic age. BOCHART assigns as the period of its origin, the age that immediately succeeded the Apostles. He says it arose, paulo post Apostolos. Salmasius even allows that this government prevailed in the church before the death of the last of the Apostles. And, in fact, this is the only period at which it can be supposed to have originated with any degree of plausibility. It shall be my task to show that it is altogether improbable, that it is almost impossible, that any innovation upon primitive order and discipline could have been effectuated at this early period.

"Within forty years after the times of the Apostles, we are told, that the Bishops, by a bold and successful effort, trampled upon the rights and privileges of the Clergy, and elevated themselves to the chair of supreme authority! What! Those who were the immediate successors of the Apostles—those who had received from these miraculous men the words of eternal truth, the institutions of God's own appointment—so soon forget the reverence and duty which they owed them—so soon, with a rash and impious hand, strike away the foundation of those venerable structures which they had erected! Would they not permit the Apostles to be cold in their graves before they began to undermine and demolish their sacred establishments? Would such iniquitous proceedings have been possible with men who exhibited, on all occasions, the warmest attachment to their Saviour, and to all his institutions? Will it be imagined that the good Ignatius, the venerable Bishop of Antioch, he who triumphantly avowed that he disregarded the pains of martyrdom, so that he could but attain to the presence of Jesus Christ—will it be imagined that he entered into a conspiracy to overthrow that government which his Saviour had established in his church? Would the illustrious Polycarp, the pride and ornament of the churches of Asia, have engaged in the execution of so foul an enterprise—he, who, when commanded to blaspheme Christ, exclaimed, "Four-score and six years have I served him, and he never did me any harm; how, then, shall I blaspheme my King and my Saviour?" In short, can all the pious Fathers that succeeded these, be supposed to have co-operated in perfecting the atrocious work which they had begun? These things will not be credited.

"But even supposing that these pious men, whose meek and unaspiring temper renders it altogether incredible that they made any such sacrilegious attempt, were inclined to obtain this pre-eminence in the church; can it be imagined, that the remaining Presbyters would have witnessed these daring usurpations with indifference? Would they have made no effort to save themselves and their brethren from the control of so undue and illegitimate an authority? Could none be found amongst them possessed of so much zeal in the service of their divine master, so ardently attached to his holy institutions, as to induce them to resist such a bold and impious attempt? In short, would not such an attempt by a few Presbyters, according to the uniform course of things, necessarily have agitated and convulsed the church? Would not the period of such an innovation have become a marked and peculiar era in her existence? Can the advocates of parity show any thing in the history of man analagous to their supposed change in ecclesiastical government at this time? Could ever such a radical and important alteration have been produced in any government, civil or ecclesiastical, without being accompanied by violence and convulsion? We find that the congregations, at this time, were extremely jealous of the authority that was exercised over them. This jealousy made its appearance even during the times of the Apostles. Some took it upon themselves to call in question the authority of St. Paul, others that of St. John. From the Epistle of Clemens to the Corinthians, it would seem as if some disorders had arisen amongst them from a similar source. Is it to be supposed then that any number of Presbyters would have dared, would have proved successful had they dared, to endeavour to accumulate in their hands such undue authority as that which we claimed by Bishops? And even if we should allow that a few Presbyters might in some places have had the talents and address to elevate themselves to this superiority over their brethren, is it probable, is it possible, that this took place at the same time over the universal church? Can such a singular coincidence of circumstances be reasonably imagined? The church had, at this time, widely extended herself over the Roman empire. Did, then, the churches of Africa, of Asia, of Europe, by a miraculous unanimity of opinion, enter at the same moment into the determination to change their form of government from the Presbyterial to the Episcopal? I will not do so much discredit to the understanding of any reader as to imagine that he does not at once perceive the inadmissibility and the absurdity of such a supposition.

"Let us, however, suppose the most that our adversaries can desire. Let us suppose that the primitive rulers of the church were destitute of principle. Let us suppose them devoid of attachment to the institutions of Christ. Let us suppose that they waited every opportunity to promote their own aggrandizement. Let us suppose the difficulties removed that opposed them in their ascent towards the chair of Episcopal authority. What was there, at this period, in the office of Bishop to excite their desires, or to invite their exertions to obtain it? The veneration attached to it, as yet, extended no farther than to the family of the faithful. The church was on all hands encountered by the bitterest enemies. By elevating themselves, therefore, to the pre-eminence of Bishops, they only raised themselves to pre-eminence in difficulties, in dangers, in deaths. Their blood was always the first that was drunk by the sword of persecution. Their station only exposed them to more certain and more horrid deaths. Was an office of this kind an object of cupidity? Is it to be supposed that great exertions would be made, many difficulties encountered, to obtain it? But I need say no more on this part of the subject.

"The idea that an alteration took place at this time in the form of government originally established in the church of Christ, is altogether unsupported by any proof.

"It is proved to be unfounded by unnumbered considerations."*

After hearing the bishop and the priest, let us hear also the Layman:

"Calvin found the whole Christian world in possession of the Episcopal form of government. The most learned supporters of the opposite doctrine scruple not to admit that Bishops existed, universally, in the church, as distinct from, and superior to, Presbyters, within forty or fifty years after the last of the Apostles. Such is the concession of Blondel, of Salmasius, of Bochartus, of Baxter, of Doddridge. Some of them, indeed, carry it up to a much earlier period; Salmasius going so far as to admit that Episcopacy prevailed shortly after the martyrdom of Paul and Peter, and long before the death of St. John.

"It is surely incumbent on those who advocate a form of government admitted to be thus new, and thus opposed to the early, universal, and uninterrupted practice of the church, to give us the most convincing and unequivocal proof of the divinity of their system. More especially when it is recollected that they can produce no record of a change; but are obliged to imagine one, in opposition to the uniform testimony of the primitive fathers of the church. The age in which they suppose a change to have taken place was a learned age, abounding in authors of the first eminence. The most minute events are recorded, and yet not a word is said of the revolution, which some men talk of, so fundamental in its nature, and so interesting in its consequences. The change, too, which they imagine, must have been both instantaneous and universal; and this at a time when there were no Christian princes to promote it; when no general council had met, or could meet to establish it; and when the fury of persecution cut off all intercourse between distant churches; leaving their Clergy, also, something else to attend to than projects of usurpation. Such are the strange and almost incredible absurdities into which men will run, rather than give up a system to which they have become wedded by educaton and by habit."*

* Cyprian, No. V. Collec. p. 144—147.

The sum of the foregoing argument is this:

"Immediately after the death of the apostles, the whole Christian world was Episcopal, and remained so, without interruption, or question, for fifteen hundred years—that no cause short of Apostolic institution, can, with any show of reason, be assigned for such an effect—that it is absurd to suppose a sudden, universal, and successful conspiracy, to change the primitive order of the church—and therefore, that Episcopacy is, at least, of apostolic origin."

Contracted into a more regular form, the argument stands thus:

That order which the church universal possessed at, or shortly after, the death of the apostles, is the order which they established and left:

But the order of the church universal, at, or shortly after the death of the apostles, was Episcopal:

Therefore, Episcopacy is the order established by the Apostles.

This reasoning appears, at first sight, to be conclusive. It certainly ought to be so, considering the interests which depend upon it, and the triumph with which it is brought forward. Nevertheless, we more than suspect a fallacy in the reasoning itself, and an errour in the assumption upon which it confessedly relies.

* Layman, No. VII. Collec. p. 89.

Supposing the fact to have been, as our Episcopal friends say it was, viz. that the accounts of the state of the Christian church after the death of the apostles, represent her, without an exception, as under Episcopal organization, we should still impeach the conclusion that Episcopacy was established by the apostles. We acknowledge, that, upon our principles, the phenomenon would be extraordinary, and the difficulty great So great, that did there exist no other records of the first constitution of the church, than the testimony of the primitive fathers; and did this testimony declare her to have been Episcopal, as that term is now understood, there could be, in our apprehension, no dispute about the matter. Common sense would instruct us to decide according to the best evidence we could get: that evidence would be altogether in favour of the Episcopal claim, which, therefore, no man in his senses, would think of disputing. We say, such would be the result were the testimony of the fathers correctly stated by the hierarchy; and had we no other documents or records to consult. But we have other and better testimony than that of the Fathers. We have the testimony of the Apostles themselves: We have their own authentic records: We have the very instrument in which the ascended Head of the church has written her whole charter with the finger of his unerring Spirit: We have the New Testament. This charter we have examined. We have minutely discussed the parts upon which our opponents rely: we have compared them with other parts of the same instrument, and we have proved that Episcopacy is not there. Admitting then, what, however, we do not admit, that the testimony of the fathers to Episcopacy is precise and full, it would be nothing to us. They must testify one of two things; either that the plan of the hierarchy is laid down in the New Testament; or simply that it existed in their days. The former would refer to the written word which we can understand as well as themselves, if not much better; so that we should not take their assertion for our interpretation. The latter could only furnish us with a subject worthy of investigation; but could not be a solid foundation for so splendid and ponderous a superstructure as the Episcopal hierarchy. Were the language of the New Testament ambiguous throughout: did it contain no internal principles of satisfactory exposition: were it, (which would render it a miraculous equivoque,) were it equally adapted to an Episcopal, or an Anti-episcopal, order; in this event, too, the testimony of the fathers would turn the balance. But as neither its language nor its facts can be made, without negligence or violence, to accord with the institutions of the hierarchy, she is not at liberty to set off the testimony of the fathers against that of the scripture; and to infer that she is of apostolical extraction, merely because she was found in being after her pretended spiritual progenitors were dead. It never can be tolerated as sound reasoning to determine the meaning of a law from certain observances which are to be tried by the law itself; and, by inference from extraneous facts, to establish, as law, a point which the law does not acknowledge. A question is at issue, whether Episcopacy is of apostolic authority or not. The law of God's house, penned by the apostles themselves, is produced; and the verdict, upon trial, is for the negative. The Episcopal counsel appeals to the Fathers; they depose, he says, that Episcopacy was in actual existence, throughout the Christian community, a little while after the death of the Apostles; and he insists that this fact shall regulate the construction of the Christian law.

"By no means;" replies the counsel on the other side. "We accuse Episcopacy of corrupting the Christian institutions; and her counsel pleads the early existence of her alleged crime, as a proof of her having conformed to the will of the Lawgiver; and that the fact of her having committed it from nearly the time of promulging the law, is a demonstration that the law not only allows but enjoins the deed!!"

The United States are a republic, with a single executive periodically chosen. Suppose that three hundred years hence they should be under the reign of a hereditary monarch; and the question should then be started whether this was the original order or not? Those who favour the negative go back to the written constitution, framed in 1787, and show that a hereditary monarchy was never contemplated in that instrument. Others contend that "The expressions of the constitution are indefinite; there are some things, indeed, which look a little republican-like, and might be accommodated to the infant state of the nation; but whoever shall consider the purposes of the order therein prescribed, and the nature of the powers therein granted, will clearly perceive that the one cannot be attained, nor the other exercised, but in a hereditary monarchy." Well, the constitution is produced; it is examined again and again; but no hereditary monarchy is recognized there; it breathes republicanism throughout: What, now, would be thought of a man, who should gravely answer, "The concurrent testimony of all the historians of those times is, that at, or very shortly after, the death of the members of the convention of 1787, monarchy prevailed throughout the United States; and this is proof positive, that it was established by the convention."

"Nay," would the first rejoin, "your facts are of no avail. The question is, not what prevailed after the constitution was adopted: but what is the constitution itself? There it is: let it argue its own cause."

"But," says the other, "how could so great a change, as that from a republic to a monarchy, happen in so short a time? and that without resistance, or, what is still more astonishing, without notice?"

"You may settle that, "retorts the first," at your leisure. That there has been a material change, I see as clearly as the light: how that change was effected, is none of my concern. It is enough for me that the constitution, fairly interpreted, knows nothing of the existing monarchy."

Every child can perceive who would have the best of this argument; and it is just such an argument as we are managing with the Episcopalians. Granting them all they ask concerning the testimony of the fathers, their conclusion is "good for nothing," because it concludes, as we have abundantly shown, against the New Testament itself. It is vain to declaim upon the improbability and impossibility of so sudden and universal a transition from Presbytery to Episcopacy, as they maintain must have taken place upon our plan. The revolution would have been very extraordinary, we confess. But many very extraordinary things are very true. All that the hierarchy gains by the testimony of the fathers, even when we allow her to state it in her own way, is an extraordinary fact which she cannot explain for herself; and, therefore, insists that we shall explain it, or else bow the knee. We excuse ourselves. We are not compelled to the latter, and we are under no obligation to the former. The controversy must perpetually return to a simple issue, viz. Whether Episcopacy and the New Testament agree or not? We have proved, as we think, that they are irreconcileable. This is enough. Here is the New Testament on one side, and the hierarchy on the other. Conceding that she had very early possession of the church, what follows? Nothing but that order of the church was very early corrupted! Whether we can or cannot trace the steps and fix the date of this corruption, does not alter the case. Corruption is corruption still. If we can tell nothing about the rise of the hierarchy, our ignorance does not destroy its contrariety to the scripture. If we could ascertain the very hour of its rise, the discovery would not increase that contrariety. Our ignorance and our knowledge on this subject leave the original question exactly where they found it. A thousand volumes may be written; and after all, the final appeal must be "to the law and to the testimony."

It is clear, therefore, that should we even acquiesce in the account which our episcopal brethren give of the primitive testimony, we are justified in denying their conclusion: seeing that all inferences against the decision of the New Testament itself, are necessarily invalid and false, be the facts from which they are deduced ever so many, ever so strong, or ever so indisputable.

But although, in our own opinion, the ground on which the prelatists have chosen to make their principal stand, affords them so little advantage as not to repay the trouble of dislodging them, we shall, for the sake of their further satisfaction, proceed to do them this service also.

They have heaped assertion upon assertion, that the testimony of the primitive church is universally in their favour; so explicitly and decisively in their favour, that if Episcopacy had not been instituted by apostolic authority, the whole Christian church must suddenly have changed her government from one end of the world to the other, without any adequate cause, and without any opportunity of previous concert.*

When our opponents talk of the early and general prevalence of episcopacy, they must mean episcopacy as embraced by themselves, i. e. as restricting the power of ordination and government to the superior order of clergy called bishops; or else they are fighting for a shadow.

We deny their representation and shall prove it to be false.†

* See the foregoing extracts.

† We cannot forbear remarking, by the way, a striking coincidence between the popish and the episcopal method of defence.

More than fourteen hundred years ago the superiority of the Prelates to Presbyters was attacked, in the most direct and open manner, as having no authority from our Lord Jesus Christ. The banner of opposition was raised not by a mean and obscure declaimer; but by a most consummate Theologian. "By one who, in the judgment of

When they begin to feel themselves pressed, they betake themselves to the scriptures; but finding themselves hard pushed here, they retreat to the fathers. There is scarcely a peculiarity of popery for which some papal polemics do not pretend to have their sanction. Take a sample.

"They of your" (the protestant) "side, that have read the fathers of that unspotted church, can well testify (and if any deny it, it shall be presently shown) that the Doctors, Pastors, and Fathers of that church do allow of traditions; that they acknowledge the real presence of the body of Christ in the sacrament of the altar: that they exhorted the people to confess their sins unto their ghostly fathers: that they affirmed, that Priests have power to forgive sins: that they taught, that there is a purgatory: that prayer for the dead is both commendable and godly: that there is Limbus Patrum; and that our Saviour descended into hell, to deliver the ancient fathers of the Old Testament; because before his passion none ever entered into heaven; that prayer to saints and use of holy images was of great account amongst them: that man had free-will, and that for his meritorious works he receiveth, through the assistance of God's grace, the bliss of everlasting happiness.

"Now would I fain know whether of both have the true Religion, they that hold all these above said points, with the primitive Church; or they that do most vehemently contradict and gainsay them? They that do not disagree with that holy church in any point of religion; or they that agree with it but in very few, and disagree in almost all?

"Will you say, that these fathers maintained these opinions, contrary to the word of God? Why you know that they were

"Erasmus, was, without controversy, by far the most learned and most eloquent of all the Christians; and the prince of Christian Divines."* By the illustrious JEROME.†

Thus he lays down both doctrine and fact relative to the government of the church, in his commentary on Titus 1. 5.

the pillars of Christianity, the champions of Christ his church, and of the true Catholic religion, which they most learnedly defended against diverse heresies; and therefore spent all their time in a most serious study of the holy scripture. Or will you say, that although they knew the scriptures to repugn, yet they brought in the aforesaid opinions by malice and corrupt intentions? Why yourselves cannot deny, but that they lived most holy and virtuous lives, free from all malicious corrupting, or perverting of God's holy word, and by their holy lives are now made worthy to reign with God in his glory. Insomuch as their admirable learning may sufficiently cross out all suspicion of ignorant error; and their innocent sanctity freeth us from all mistrust of malicious corruption." Challenge of a Jesuit to Bishop Usher.

In the course of his full and elaborate answer to this challenge, Usher quotes Cardinal Bellarmine as one "who would face us down that all the ancients both Greek and Latin, from the very time of the Apostles, did constantly teach that there was a purgatory. Whereas," replies Usher, "his own partners could tell him in his ear, that in the ancient writers there is almost no mention of purgatory; especially in the Greek writers." USHER'S Answer, &c. p. 170, 4to. 1625.

For "Purgatory," put "Episcopacy," and you will see pretty nearly how the account stands between eminent Episcopalians themselves.

* We quote the words of one who was assuredly no friend to our cause, vid. CAVE, His. Litt. Script: Eccles. p. 171. Ed. 1720. Fol.

† PROSPER, who was nearly his cotemporary, calls him magister mundi: i. e. the teacher of the world. Ib.

*That thou shouldest ordain Presbyters in every city, as I had appointed thee—" What sort of Pres-

* " Qui qualis Presbyter debeat ordinari, in consequentibus disserens hoc ait: Si qui est sine crimine, unius uxoris vir," et cætera: postea intulit, " Oportet. n. Episcopum sine crimine esse, tanquam Dei dispensatorem." Idem est ergo Presbyter, qui et Episcopus, et antequam diaboli instinctu, studia in religione fierent, et diceretur in populis: " Ego sum Pauli, ego Apollo, ego autem Cephæ:" communi Presbyterorum consilio ecclesiæ gubernabantur. Postquam vero unusquisque eos, quos baptizaverat, suos putabat esse, non Christi: in toto orbe decretum est, ut unus de Presbyteris electus superponeretur cæteris, ad quem omnis ecclesiæ cura pertineret, et schismatum semina tollerentur. Putet aliquis non scripturarum, sed nostram, esse sententiam Episcopum et Presbyterum unum esse; et aliud ætatis, aliud esse nomen officii: relegat Apostoli ad Philippenses verba dicentis: Paulus et Timotheus servi Jesu Christi, omnibus sanctis in Christo Jesu, qui sunt Philippis, cum Episcopis et Diaconis, gratia vobis et pax, et reliqua. Philippi una est urbs Macedoniæ, et certe in una civitate plures ut nuncupantur, Episcopi esse non poterant. Sed quia eosdem Episcopos illo tempore quos et Presbyteros appellabant, propterea indifferenter de Episcopis quasi de Presbyteris est locutus. Adhuc hoc alicui videatur ambiguum, nisi altero testimonio comprobetur. In Actibus Apostolorum scriptum est, quod cum venisset Apostolus Miletum, miserit Ephesum, et vocaverit Presbyteros ecclesiæ ejusdem, quibus postea inter cætera sit locutus: attendite vobis, et omni gregi in quo vos Spiritus sanctus posuit Episcopos, pascere ecclesiam Domini quam acquisivit per sanguinem suum. Et hoc diligentius observate, quo modo unius civitatis Ephesi Presbyteros vocans, postea eosdem Episcopos dixerit.—Hæc propterea, ut ostenderemus apud veteres eosdem fuisse Presbyteros quos et Episcopos. Paulatim vero, ut dissensionum plantaria evellerentur, ad unum omnem solicitudinem esse delatam.—Sicut ergo Presbyteri sciunt se ex ecclesiæ consuetudine ei, qui sibi propositus fuerit, esse subjectos, ita Episcopi noverint se magis consuetudine quam dispositionis dominicæ veritate, Presbyteris esse majores. HIERONYMI Com: in Tit: I. 1. Opp. Tom. VI. p. 168 ed: Victorii, Paris 1623. Fol.

byters ought to be ordained he shows afterwards: If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, &c. and then adds, for a bishop must be blameless, as the steward of God, &c. A Presbyter, therefore, is the same as a bishop: and before there were, by the instigation of the devil, parties in religion; and it was said among different people, I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, the churches were governed by the joint counsel of the Presbyters. But afterwards, when every one accounted those whom he baptized as belonging to himself and not to Christ, it was decreed throughout the whole world that one, chosen from among the Presbyters, should be put over the rest, and that the whole care of the church should be committed to him, and the seeds of schisms taken away.

"Should any one think that this is my private opinion, and not the doctrine of the scriptures, let him read the words of the apostle in his epistle to the Philippians; 'Paul and Timotheus, the servants of Jesus Christ, to all the saints in Christ Jesus which are at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons,' &c. Philippi, is a single city of Macedonia; and certainly in one city there could not be several bishops as they are now styled; but as they, at that time, called the very same persons bishops whom they called Presbyters, the Apostle has spoken without distinction of bishops as Presbyters.

"Should this matter yet appear doubtful to any one, unless it be proved by an additional testimony; it is written in the acts of the Apostles, that when Paul had come to Miletum, he sent to Ephesus and called the Presbyters of that church, and among other things said to them, 'take heed to yourselves and to all the flock in which the Holy Spirit hath made you bishops.' Take particular notice, that calling the PRESBYTERS of the single city of Ephesus, he afterwards names the same persons BISHOPS." After further quotations from the epistle to the Hebrews, and from Peter, he proceeds: "Our intention in these remarks is to show, that, among the ancients, Presbyters and Bishops were THE VERY SAME. But that BY LITTLE AND LITTLE, that the plants of dissentions might be plucked up, the whole concern was divolved upon an individual. As the Presbyters, therefore, KNOW that they are subjected, BY THE CUSTOM OF THE CHURCH, to him who is set over them; so let the Bishops know, that they are greater than Presbyters MORE BY CUSTOM, than by ANY REAL APPOINTMENT OF CHRIST."

He pursues the same argument, with great point, in his famous Epistle to Evagrius, asserting and proving from the Scriptures, that in the beginning and during the Apostles' days, a Bishop and a Presbyter were the same thing. He then goes on: "As to the fact, that AFTERWARDS, one was ELECTED to preside over the rest, this was done as a remedy against schism; lest every one drawing his proselytes to himself, should rend the church of Christ. For even at Alexandria, from the Evangelist Mark to the Bishops Heraclas and Dionysius, the Presbyters always chose one of their number, placed him in a superior station, and gave him the title of Bishop: in the same manner as if an army should MAKE an emperor; or the deacons should choose from among themselves, one whom they knew to be particularly active, and should call him ARCH-DEACON. For, excepting ordination, what is done by a Bishop, which may not be done by a Presbyter? Nor is it to be supposed, that the church should be one thing at Rome, and another in all the world besides. Both France and Britain, and Africa, and Persia, and the East, and India, and all the barbarous nations worship one Christ, observe one rule of truth. If you demand authority, the globe is greater than a city. Wherever a Bishop shall be found, whether at Rome, or Eugubium, or Constantinople, or Rhegium, or Alexandria, or Tanis, he has the same pretensions, the same priesthood."*

* Quod autem postea unus electus est, qui cæteris præponeretur, in schismatis remedium factum est: ne unusquisque ad se trahens Christi Ecclesiam rumperet. Nam et Alexandriæ à Marco Evangelista usque ad Heraclam & Dionysium Episcopos, presbyteri semper unum ex se electum, in excelsiori gradu collocatum, Episcopum nominabant: quomodo si exercitus imperatorem faciat; aut diaconi eligant de se, quem industrium noverint, & archidiaconum vocent. Quid enim facit, excepta ordinatione, Episcopus, quod pres-

Here is an account of the origin and progress of Episcopacy, by a Father whom the Episcopalians themselves admit to have been the most able and learned man of his age; and how contradictory it is to their own account, the reader will be at no loss to perceive, when he shall have followed us through an analysis of its several parts.

1. JEROME expressly denies the superiority of Bishops to Presbyters, by divine right. To prove his assertion on this head, he goes directly to the scriptures; and argues, as the advocates of parity do, from the interchangeable titles of Bishop and Presbyter; from the directions given to them without the least intimation of difference in their authority; and from the powers of Presbyters, undisputed in his day. It is very true, that the reasoning from names, is said, by those whom it troubles, to be "miserable sophistry," and "good for nothing:" But as Jerome advances it with the utmost confidence, they might have forborne such a compliment to the "prince of divines" in the fourth century; especially as none of his cotemporaries, so far as we recollect, ever attempted to answer byter non faciat? Nec altera Romanæ urbis Ecclesia, altera totius orbis existimanda est. Et Galliæ, & Brittaniæ, & Africa, & Persis, & Oriens, & India, & omnes barbaræ nationes unum Christum adorant, unam observant regulam veritatis. Si auctoritas quæritur, orbis major est urbe. Ubicumque fuerit Episcopus, sive Romæ, sive Eugubii, sive Constantinopoli, sive Rhegii, sive Alexandriæ, sive Tanis; ejusdem meriti, ejusdem & sacerdotii. Hieron. Opp. T. II. p. 624.

it. It is a little strange that laymen, and clergymen, deacons, priests, and bishops, should all be silenced by a page of "miserable sophistry!"

2. JEROME states it, as a historical fact, that, in the original constitution of the church, before the devil had as much influence as he acquired afterwards, the churches were governed by the joint counsels of the Presbyters.

3. JEROME states it as a historical fact, that this government of the churches, by Presbyters alone, continued until, for the avoiding of scandalous quarrels and schisms, it was thought expedient to alter it. "Afterwards," says he, "when every one accounted those whom he baptized as belonging to himself, and not to Christ, it was decreed throughout the whole world, that one, chosen from among the Presbyters, should be put over the rest, and that the whole care of the church should be committed to him."

4. JEROME states it as a historical fact, that this change in the government of the church—this creation of a superiour order of ministers, took place, not at once, but by degrees—"Paulatim," says he, "by little and little." The precise date on which this innovation upon primitive order commenced, he does not mention; but he says positively, that it did not take place till the factious spirit of the Corinthians had spread itself in different countries, to an alarming extent. "In populis," is his expression. Assuredly, this was not the work of a day. It had not been accomplished when the apostolic epistles were written, because Jerome appeals to these for proof that the churches were then governed by the joint counsels of Presbyters; and it is incredible that such ruinous dissensions, had they existed, should not have been noticed in letters to others beside the Corinthians. The disease indeed, was of a nature to spread rapidly; but still it must have time to travel. With all the zeal of Satan himself, and of a parcel of wicked or foolish clergymen to help him, it could not march from people to people, and clime to clime, but in a course of years. If Episcopacy was the apostolic cure for schism, the contagion must have smitten the nations like a flash of lightning. This would have been quite as extraordinary as an instantaneous change of government; and would have afforded full as much scope for pretty declamation, as the dream of such a change, which Cyprian and the Layman insist we shall dream whether we will or not. No: The progress of the mischief was gradual, and so, according to Jerome, was the progress of the remedy which the wisdom of the times devised.*

* Our opponents, who contend that nothing can be concluded from the promiscuous use of the scriptural titles of office, are yet compelled to acknowledge that Bishop and Presbyter were afterwards separated and restricted, the former to the superiour, and the latter to the inferiour order of ministers. We would ask them when and why this was done? If it was not necessary to distinguish these officers by specific titles in the apostles' day, what necessity

We agree with them, who think that the experiment introduced more evil than it banished.*

5. JEROME states as historical facts, that the elevation of one Presbyter over the others, was a human contrivance;—was not imposed by authority, was there for such a distinction afterwards? The church might have gone on, as she began, to this very hour; and what would have been the harm? Nay, there was a necessity for the distinction; and Jerome has blown the secret. When one of the Presbyters was set over the heads of the others, there was a new officer, and he wanted a name. So they appropriated the term Bishop to him; and thus avoided the odium of inventing a title unknown to the scripture. The people, no doubt, were told that there was no material alteration in the scriptural order; and hearing nothing but a name to which they had always been accustomed, they were the less startled. The Trojan horse over again!

* One thing is obvious. Had there never been, in the persons of the prelates, a sort of spiritual noblesse; there could never have been, in the person of the Pope, a spiritual monarch. For the very same reason that a Bishop was appointed to preserve unity among the Presbyters, it was necessary, in process of time, to appoint an Archbishop for preserving unity among the bishops; for we never yet heard, that increase of power makes its possessors less aspiring. In the same manner a patriarch became necessary to keep their graces the Archbishops in order: and finally, our sovereign lord the Pope, to look after the patriarchs! The analogy is perfect; the reasoning one; and the progression regular. What a beautiful pile! How correct its proportions! how elegant its workmanship! how compact and firm its structure! the Christian people at the bottom; rising above them, the preaching deacons: next in order, the Presbyters; above them, the Bishops; these support the Archbishops, over whom tower the patriarchs; and one universal Bishop terminates the whole. Thus this glorious Babylonish edifice, having for its base the Christian world, tapers off, by exquisite gradations, into "his holiness" at Rome.

but crept in by custom;—and that the Presbyters of his day, knew this very well. As, therefore, says he, the Presbyters KNOW that they are subjected to their superiour by CUSTOM; so let the bishops know that they are above the Presbyters, rather by the CUSTOM OF THE CHURCH, than by the Lord's appointment.

6. JEROME states it as a historical fact, that the first bishops were made by the Presbyters themselves; and consequently they could neither have, nor communicate any authority above that of Presbyters. "Afterwards," says he, "to prevent schism, one was elected to preside over the rest." Elected and commissioned by whom? By the Presbyters: for he immediately gives you a broad fact which it is impossible to explain away. "At Alexandria," he tells you, "from the evangelist Mark to the Bishops Heraclas and Dionysius," i. e. till about the middle of the third century, "the Presbyters always chose one of their number, placed him in a superiour station, and gave him the title of Bishop."

We have not forgotten the gloss put upon this passage, by Detector, in the collection under review.

"The truth is," says he, "that Jerome affords no authority for this assertion. In his Epistle to Evag. he says, "Nam et Alexandriæ, a Marco Evangelista usque ad Heraclam et Dionysium Episcopos, Presbyteri semper unum ex se electum, excelsiori gradu collocatum, Episcopum nominabant, quomodo si exercitus imperatorem faciat, aut diaconi eligant de se quem industrium noverint, et archidiaconum vocent." "At Alexandria, from Mark down to Heraclas and Dionysius the Bishops, the Presbyters always named one, who being chosen from among themselves, they called their Bishop, he being placed in a higher station, in the same manner as if an army should make their general, &c." Does St. Jerome here declare, as the fictitious "Clemens" asserts, that "the Presbyters ordained their Bishop?" No; Jerome merely asserts, that the Presbyters named, chose one to be their Bishop. Does it hence follow, that they gave him his commission; that they ordained him? Does it always follow, that because an army choose their general, he does not receive his commission from the supreme authority of the state?"*

With all deference to this learned critic, we cannot help our opinion, that the appointment, or, if you please, ordination, of the first bishops by Presbyters, not only follows from the words of Jerome, but is plainly asserted by them.

Dr. Hobart, overlooking the Roman idiom, has thrown into his English, an ambiguity which does not exist in the Latin of Jerome. According to the well known genius of that language, especially in writers who condense their thoughts, a verb governing one or more participles, in the construction before us, expresses the same meaning, though with greater elegance, as would be expressed by verbs instead of participles.† It is very possible that the Detector might not use this construction; but then the Detector does not write Latin like old Jerome. We should display the sentence at length, converting the participles into verbs, were it not for fear of affronting a scholar who insists that he has "sufficient learning to defend the Episcopal church."*

* Detector, No. 1. Collec. p. 84.

† Ex. gr. In Cæsar's description of the bridge which he constructed over the Rhine, the first sentence is exactly analogous to the sentence of Jerome: "Tigna bina sesquipedalia, paullum ab imo præacuta, dimensa ad altitudinem fluminis, intervallo pedum duorum inter se jungebat." De Bello Gallico. Lib. IV. c. 17. p. 187. ed. Oudenorpii. 4to. 1737.

"The truth is," that this "famous" testimony of Jerome, points out, in the process of bishop-making, but one agency, and that is the agency of Presbyters. Dr. H. himself has unwittingly confirmed our interpretation in the very paragraph where he questions it. His words are these: "Jerome merely asserts that the Presbyters named, chose one to be their bishop." Not merely this; for the words which Dr. H. renders "being placed in a higher station," are under the very same connection and government with the words which he renders, "being chosen from among themselves;" and if, as he has admitted, the latter declare a bishop to have been elected by the Presbyters, then, himself being judge, the former must declare him to have been commissioned by them. This is an awkward instance of felo de se; yet a proof, how properly the Reverend critic has assumed the ap-

We humbly apprehend that Cæsar had as much to do in sharpening and measuring the beams, as he had in joining them; and did not mean to say that the last operation was performed by his own hands, and the former by his workmen.

* Hobart's Apology, p. 241.

pellation of Detector; for he has completely detected himself, and no one else!

That we rightly construe Jerome's assertion, is clear, from the scope of his argument, and from his phraseology toward the close of the paragraph.

His position is, that a Bishop and a Presbyter were, at first, the same officer. And so notorious was the fact, that he appeals to the history of the church in Alexandria, as an instance which lasted a century and a half, that when Bishops were made, they were made by Presbyters. But had Dr. H.'s construction been right, had Prelates alone ordained other prelates, the fact, instead of being for Jerome, would have been directly against him: and surely he was not so dull as to have overlooked this circumstance; although it seems to have escaped the notice of some of his sagacious commentators.

JEROME says, moreover, that Presbyters originally became Bishops, much in the same way as if an army should "MAKE an Emperor; or the deacons should elect one of themselves, and call him Arch-deacon."

The Detector has given the passage a twist, in the hope of twisting Jerome out, and twisting the hierarchy in. "Does it always follow," he demands, "that because an army choose their general, he does not receive his commission from the supreme authority of the state?" Certainly not: Although he would have gratified some of his readers by producing examples of the armies of those ages choosing their general, and remitting him to a higher authority for his commission. But how came the Detector to alter Jerome's phrase from "making" to "choosing" a general? We always thought, that making and commissioning an officer, are the same thing. Further, how came the Detector to render Jerome's "imperator" by "general?" Almost all the world, (for the Detector seems to be an exception,) knows that "Imperator," in Jerome's day, signified not "general," but "Emperor;" and was the highest official title of the Roman monarchs. It is further known, that the army had, on more occasions than one, made an emperor; and that this was all the commission he had. "You inquire," says Jerome, "how the bishops were at first appointed. Suppose the deacons should get together and elect one of their number to preside over the rest, with the title of Arch-deacon; or suppose the army should elevate a person whom they thought fit, to the Imperial throne; just so, by their own authority and election, did the Presbyters make the first Bishops."—And yet Dr. H. can find, in this very testimony, a salvo for Episcopal ordination.—His powers of detection are very uncommon;

> For optics sharp he needs, I ween,
> Who sees what is not to be seen!

7. JEROME states it, as a historical fact, that even in his own day, that is, toward the end of the fourth century, there was no power, excepting ordination, exercised by a Bishop, which might not be exercised by a Presbyter. "What does a Bishop," he asks, "excepting ordination, which a Presbyter may not do?"

Two observations force themselves upon us.

1st. Jerome challenges the whole world, to show in what prerogative a Presbyter was, at that time, inferiour to a Bishop, excepting the single power of ordination. A challenge which common sense would have repressed, had public opinion concerning the rights of Presbyters allowed it to be successfully met.

2d. Although it appears from Jerome himself, that the prelates were not then in the habit of associating the Presbyters with themselves, in an equal right of government, yet, as he told the former, to their faces, that the right was undeniable, and ought to be respected by them, it presents us with a strong fact in the progress of Episcopal domination. Here was a power in Presbyters, which, though undisputed, lay, for the most part, dormant. The transition from disuse, to denial, and from denial to extinction of powers which the possessors have not vigilance, integrity, or spirit to enforce, is natural, short, and rapid. According to Jerome's declaration, the hierarchy did not pretend to the exclusive right of government. Therefore, there was but half a hierarchy, according to the present system. That the Bishops had, some time after, the powers of ordination and government both, is clear. How did they acquire the monopoly? By apostolic institution? No. Jerome refutes that opinion from the scriptures and history. By apostolical tradition? No. For in the latter part of the fourth century, their single prerogative over Presbyters was the power of ordination. Government was at first exercised by the Presbyters in common. When they had, by their own act, placed a superiour over their own heads, they rewarded his distinction, his toils, and his perils, with a proportionate reverence; they grew slack about the maintenance of troublesome privilege; till at length, their courtesy, their indolence, their love of peace, or their hope of promotion, permitted their high and venerable trust to glide into the hands of their prelates. We have no doubt that the course of the ordaining power was similar, though swifter.

Nothing can be more pointless and pithless than the declamation of Cyprian, the Layman, and their Bishop, on the change which took place in the original order of the church. They assume a false fact, to wit, that the change must have happened, if it happened at all, instantaneously: and then they expatiate, with great vehemence, on the impossibility of such an event. This is mere noise. The change was not instantaneous, nor sudden. The testimony of Jerome, which declares that it was gradual, has sprung a mine under the very foundation of their edifice, and blown it into the air. Were we inclined to take up more of the reader's time on this topic, we might turn their own weapon, such as it is, against themselves. They do not pretend that Archbishops, Patriarchs, and Primates, are of Apostolical institution. They will not so insult the understanding and the senses of men, as to maintain that these officers have no more power than simple Bishops. Where, then, were all the principles of adherence to Aposlic order when these creatures of human policy made their entrance into the church? Among whom were the daring innovators to be found? Where was the learning of the age? Where its spirit of piety, and its zeal of martyrdom? Where were the Presbyters? Where the Bishops? What! all, all turned traitors at once? All, all conspire to abridge their own rights, and submit their necks to new-made superiours? What! none to reclaim or remonstrate? Absurd! Incredible! Impossible! These questions, and a thousand like them, might be asked by an advocate for the divine right of Patriarchs, with as much propriety and force, as they are asked by advocates of the simpler Episcopacy. And so, by vociferating on abstract principles, the evidence of men's eyes and ears is to be overturned, and they are to believe that there are not now, and never have been, such things as Archbishops, Patriarchs, or Primates in the Christianized world.

seeing that by the assumption of the argument, they have no divine original; and by its terms, they could not have been introduced by mere human contrivance.

To return to Jerome. The Prelatists being unable to evade his testimony concerning the change which was effected in the original order of the church, would persuade us that he means a change brought about by the authority of the Apostles themselves.* But the subterfuge is unavailing. For,

(1.) It alleges a conjectural tradition against the authority of the written scriptures. For no trace of a change can be seen there.

(2.) It overthrows completely all the proof drawn for the hierarchy from the Apostolic records. For, if this change was introduced by the Apostles after their canonical writings were closed, then it is vain to seek for it in those writings. The consequence is, that the Hierarchists must either retreat from the New Testament, or abandon Jerome.

(3.) It makes the intelligent father a downright fool—to plead Apostolic authority for the original equality of ministers; and in the same breath to produce that same authority for the inequality which he was resisting!

(4.) To crown the whole, it tells us that the apostles having fixed, under the influence of divine inspiration, an order for the church; found, upon a few years' trial, that it would not do, and were obliged to mend it: only they forgot to apprise the churches of the alteration; and so left the exploded order in the rule of faith; and the new order out of it; depositing the commission of the prelates with that kind foster-mother of the hierarchy, *Tradition!

* Hobart's Apology, p. 174, &c.

We may now remind our reader of the Layman's declaration, that we "can produce NO record of a CHANGE; but are obliged to imagine one, in opposition to the UNIFORM testimony of the primitive Fathers!" And of the declaration of Cyprian, that we talk "of a change that must have taken place at an early period; but can produce NO PROOF on which to ground our bold assertions"—That we "are countenanced by NONE OF THE RECORDS of these times that have been transmitted to us"—That our opinion is "mere conjecture, a creature of the imagination!!" These gentlemen have, indeed, made their excuse; they have honestly told us, what their pages verify, that they are but "striplings" in literature. But that a prelate, from whom we have a right to look for digested knowledge, and scrupulous accuracy, should deal out the same crude and unqualified language, excites both surprise and regret. He has been pleased to say, that our late brother, the Rev. DR. LINN, in "representing Jerome as favouring the Presbyterian scheme of church go- vernment," has "pursued the usual mode of ARTFUL MISREPRESENTATION." With whom the misrepresentation lies, we leave to public opinion. But as we wish to give every one his due, we cannot charge the Right Reverend Prelate with any art; nor withhold an advice, that when he is searching, on this subject, for a "spark of modesty," he would direct his inquiries to a "bosom" to which he has much easier access, than to the bosom of any Presbyterian under heaven.

* If any of our readers wishes to have a fuller view of the writings of the hierarchy on Jerome's spear, we advise him to read Dr. Hobart's Apology, p. 174—194.

After this exhibition of Jerome's testimony, it would be superfluous to follow with particular answers, all the petty exceptions which are founded upon vague allusions and incidental phrases. Jerome, like every other writer upon subjects which require a constant reference to surrounding habits, conforms his speech to his circumstances. He could not be for ever on his guard; and if he had been, no vigilance could have secured him from occasional expressions which might be interpreted as favourable to a system which he solemnly disapproved. This will sufficiently account for those disconnected sentences which the friends of the hierarchy have so eagerly seized. We could show, taking them one by one, that they fall very far short of the mark to which they are directed.*

* The quotation which stands most in the way of our argument, and of Jerome's testimony, is from his "Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers;" where, says Dr. Hobart, "he records as a matter of fact, 'JAMES, immediately after our Lord's ascension, having been

When we want to know a man's matured thoughts on a disputed point, we must go to those parts of his works where he has deliberately, and of set purpose, handled it. All his looser observations must be controlled by these. A contrary procedure inverts every law of criticism; and the inversion is not the more tolerable, or the less reprehensible, because advocates of the hierarchy have chosen to adopt it. But if Jerome's testimony is to be slighted, because he was fervid, impetuous, and unceremonious, we much fear that some of the most important facts in ecclesiastical and civil history must be branded as apocryphal. We are very sure that none of Dr. H.'s friends could ask ORDAINED BISHOP OF JERUSALEM, undertook the charge of the church at Jerusalem. TIMOTHY was ORDAINED BISHOP of the Ephesians by PAUL, TITUS of Crete. POLYCARP was by JOHN ORDAINED BISHOP of Smyrna.' Here, then," the reader perceives the triumph, "here, then, we have bishops ordained in the churches by the apostles themselves." HOBART'S Apology, p. 194.

There is a small circumstance rather unfavourable to this voucher.—It is not JEROME'S. Of that part which relates to Timothy and Titus, this is expressly asserted by the episcopal historian, CAVE; and by Jerome's popish editor. Vide CAVE, Script. eccles. hist. litter. p. 172, ed. Colon. 1720. HIERON. Opp. T. I. p. 265. 268. ed. Victorii. The articles JAMES and POLYCARP are so precisely in the same style with the others, and so diametrically repugnant to Jerome's own doctrine, that if, by "bishop," is meant such a bishop as was known in his day, it is inconceivable they should have proceeded from his pen. That they are interpolations, or have been interpolated, we think there is internal evidence. At least, when several articles of the same catalogue, tending to the same point, and written in the same strain, are confessedly spurious; it is hardly safe to rely upon the remainder as authentic testimony.

the credence of the world to a single assertion in his Apology. And if similar productions were the fashion of the day, we have no reason to wonder at indignant feeling and vehement language in men of a less fiery spirit than father JEROME.

The advocates of Episcopacy assert that the whole current of fact and of opinion for fifteen hundred years after Christ, is in their favour; that we "can produce no record of a change," in the government of the church, "but are obliged to imagine one in opposition to the uniform testimony of the primitive fathers."

We have met them on this ground; and have "produced" the "testimony" of one of the "primitive fathers," directly against the divine original of the hierarchy. This was JEROME, the most learned, able, and distinguished of them all. He tells us, in so many words, not only that the episcopal pre-eminence is without divine authority; but that this was a fact which could not, with any show of reason, be disputed; as being a fact well ascertained and understood. "The Presbyters," says he, "know, that they are subjected by the custom of the church, to him who is set over them."*

To elude the force of Jerome's deposition, it is alleged, among other things, that his opinion is of no weight unsupported by facts; and that his testimony, in the fourth century, concerning facts in the first and second centuries, that is, two or three hundred years before he was born, is no better than an opinion; and so he is excluded from the number of competent witnesses.*

* See page 234.

By this rule some other witnesses who have been summoned by our Episcopal brethren, must be cast without a hearing. Eusebius, Chrysostom, Augustin, Theodoret, Epiphanius, must all be silenced. It is even hard to see how a single man could be left, in the whole catalogue of the Fathers, as competent to certify any fact of which he was not an eye-witness. To say that they derived their information of times past from credible tradition, or authentic records, is indeed to overrule the principle of the objection. But when this door is opened to admit the others, you cannot prevent JEROME from walking in. We will allow that EUSEBIUS had access to "all the necessary records of the churches." But had JEROME no records to consult? Was "the most learned of all the Christians," as ERASMUS calls him, with CAVE's approbation, in the habit of asserting historical facts without proof? If he was, let our opponents show it. If he was not, as his high reputation for learning is a pledge, then his testimony is to be viewed as a summary of inductive evidence reaching back to the days of the Apostles. In his estimation, the facts of the original parity of ministers, and of the subsequent elevation of prelates by the custom of the church, were so undeniable, that he did not think it worth his while to name a document. The conduct of this great man was different from that of some very confident writers whom we could mention. He sifted his authorities, and then brought forward his facts without any specific reference, instead of m king stiff assertions upon the credit of authors, w om he never read, nor even consulted.

* CYPRIAN, No. VII. Essays, p. 167. HOBART'S Apology, p. 171—178.

JEROME, we contend, is not only as good a witness in the case before us, as EUSEBIUS or any other father, but that he is a far better and more unexceptionable witness than either that renowned historian, or any other prelate or friend of prelates. Whatever Eusebius, Chrysostom, Epiphanius, Theodoret, &c. testify in favour of episcopacy, must be received with this very important qualification, that they were themselves bishops; and were testifying in favour of their own titles, emolument, grandeur, and power. They had a very deep interest at stake. An interest sufficient, if not to shake their credibility on this point, yet greatly to reduce its value. On the contrary, JEROME had nothing to gain, but much to lose. He put his interest and his peace in jeopardy. He had to encounter the hostility of the episcopal order, and of all who aspired to its honours. He had to resist the growing encroachments of corruption, and that under the formidable protection of a civil establishment. He had, therefore, every possible inducement to be sure of his facts before he attacked a set of dignitaries who were not, in his age, the most forbearing of mankind.* The conclusion is, that JEROME, as we said, is a more unexceptionable witness than any prelate. To illustrate—let us suppose a tribunal erected in England to try this question, Is Episcopacy of divine institution? that no witnesses can be procured but such as were brought up in the church itself; and that the judges were obliged to depend upon their report of facts. The bishop of Durham is sworn, and deposes that he has examined the records of the church, and finds her to have been episcopal from the beginning. A presbyter of the same church, of equal talent, learning, and application, is sworn, and deposes that he too has examined the records, and finds that, at the beginning, these Christian ministers were of equal rank; but that by degrees inequality crept in; and that the bishops have no pre-eminence but what the custom of the church has given them. In general character, for integrity, the witnesses are equal. They flatly contradict each other. Who, now, is the most credible witness? The presbyter runs the hazard of almost every thing in life by his testimony. The testimony of my lord of Durham goes to protect his own dignity in the church; his seat in the house of peers; and a revenue of £20,000 sterling, per annum. A child can decide who is most worthy of credit. Nearly such is the difference between the witnesses for Episcopacy, and JEROME, the witness for Presbytery.

* MOSHEIM, Vol. I. p. 356.

But we waive our advantage. We shall lay no stress upon JEROME's opinion. We shall cut off from his deposition every thing but what came within his personal observation. "The presbyters," says he, "know that they are subject to their bishop, by the custom of the church." His testimony embraces a fact in existence and obvious at the time of deposition; viz. the knowledge which the presbyters of his day had of their being subject to their bishops, solely by the custom of the church, and not by Christ's appointment. This assertion is correct, or it is not. If it is not, then JEROME appealed to all the world for the truth of what he knew, and every body else knew, was an absurd lie. No brass on the face of impudence, inferiour to that of the Duc de Cadore, is brazen enough for this. On the other hand, if the assertion be correct, how is this knowledge "of the presbyters" to be explained? Where did they get it? From one of two sources. Either there must have been such a previous discussion of the subject, as ended in establishing a general conviction in the minds of the Christian clergy, that prelacy is a human invention; or which is more probable, the remnants and the recollection of the primitive order still subsisted in considerable vigour, notwithstanding the rapid growth of the hierarchy since the accession of Constantine.

It is inconceivable how JEROME should tell the bishops to their faces, that Christ never gave them any superiority over the presbyters; that custom was their only title; and that the presbyters were perfectly aware of this; unless he was supported by facts which they were unable to contradict. Their silence under his challenges, is more than a presumption that they found it wise to let him alone. It amounts to little short of absolute proof, that there was yet such a mass of information concerning their rise, and so much of unsubdued spirit in the church, as rendered it dangerous to commit their claim to the issue of free inquiry. JEROME, with the register of antiquity in his hand, and the train of presbyters at his back, was too potent an adversary. They could have crushed the man; but they trembled at the truth; and so they sat quietly down, leaving to time and habit, the confirmation of an authority which they did not, as yet, venture to derive from the word of God.

In the next age, when JEROME was dead, the presbyters cowed; and the usurpation of the prelates further removed from the reach of a reforming hand; EPIPHANIUS did, it is true, bluster at no ordinary rate against the "heretic" AERIUS; for what reason we shall shortly see. But it is very remarkable, that in the fourth century, when the pretensions of the prelates were pretty openly canvassed, they spoke with great caution, and with manifest reluctance on those parts of Scripture which touch the point of parity. Let any one, for example, look at the commentaries of CHRYSOSTOM on the epistles to Timothy and Titus. Copious and fluent on other passages, he is most concise and embarrassed on those which relate to ministerial rank. Something he was obliged to say: but the plain words of the apostle exhibit a picture so unlike the hierarchy, that the eloquent patriarch, under the semblance of interpretation, throws in a word or two to blind the eyes of his readers, and shuffles off to something else; but never so much as attempts to argue the merits of the question upon scriptural ground. This is the reverse of JEROME's practice in his exposition. At this early day we find the advocate for parity boldly appealing to Scripture; examining, comparing, and reasoning upon its decisions; and the prelatical expounder skipping away from it with all possible haste and dexterity. We leave the reader to draw his own inference.

The sentiment that Prelates are superiour to Presbyters, not by any divine appointment, but merely by the prevalence of custom, extended, among the Latins of the fourth century, much further than Father JEROME. He himself tells us, that the Presbyters of his day not only thought so, but knew so; and, assuming this as an incontrovertible fact, he grounds upon it an admonition to the Bishops to recollect their origin. "Let them know," says he, "that they are above the Presbyters more by the custom of the Church, than by any institution of Christ." Considering him as an honest witness, which is all we ask, and our Episcopal friends will not deny it, he asserts, without qualification, that the Presbyters, i. e. the mass of Christian clergy, in his time, were convinced, upon satisfactory proof, that the authority exercised over them by the prelates, limited, as it then was, and nothing like what they now claim, had no warrant whatever, either in the word of God, or even in apostolical tradition! We repeat it; the great body of the Christian clergy, according to JEROME, were aware of this!! Here, since they call for facts, here is a fact more ponderous than all the facts of Episcopacy put together; a fact which there is no frittering away, not even by the force of that vigorous criticism which inverts persons and tenses; transmutes Hebrew verbs into others with which they have no affinity; and changes the very letters of the Hebrew alphabet; so that a ז (zain,) is charmed into a נ (nun,) and, by this happy metamorphosis, the throat of an ill-conditioned argument escapes from suffocation!*

The testimony of JEROME is corroborated by a contemporary writer of high renown, and an unexceptionable witness in this case, as being himself a Prelate; we mean AUGUSTIN, the celebrated Bishop of Hippo. In a letter to JEROME, he has these remarkable words:—

* Churchman's Magazine for May and June, 1810. on Exod. xxxiii. 19. p. 178.

"Although, according to the names of honour "which the usage of the Church has NOW acquired, the office of a Bishop is greater than that of a Presbyter, yet in many things Augustin is inferiour to Jerome."* The sense of this acknowledgment is thus given by a distinguished Prelate of the Church of England, as quoted by Ayton:—"The office of a Bishop is above the office of a Priest, not by the authority of the Scripture, but after the names of honour which, through the custom of the Church, have now obtained."†

The concession is so clear and ample, that Cardinal BELLARMINE, with all his integrity, which was not a little, had no other evasion, than to pretend that these words are not opposed to the ancient time of the Church; but to the time before the Christian Church; so that the sense is, before the times of the Christian Church these names, Bishop and Presbyter, were not titles of honour, but of office and age; but now they are names of honour and dignity.‡

Quibbles were scarce when a distressed cardinal could muster up nothing more plausible. As

* Quanquam secundum honorum vocabula quæ jam Ecclesiæ usus obtinuit, episcopatus presbyterio major sit; tamen in multis rebus Augustinus Hieronymo minor est. Ep. 19. ed HIERON.

† JEWEL. Defence of his apology, p. 122, 123.

‡ Jameson's Nazianzeni querela, p. 177, 178.

if names of office were not names of dignity! As if AUGUSTIN, in the very act of paying a tribute of profound respect to JEROME, should think of giving him a bit of grammar lesson about the words "Bishop" and "Presbyter!" Verily, the Jesuit was in sore affliction; and had he uttered all his soul, would have exclaimed, like a certain Arminian preacher, when hard pressed by Scriptural reasoning;—"O argument, argument! The Lord rebuke thee, argument!"

Not much happier than the cardinal, nor much less anxious for such a rebuke to argument than the Arminian preacher, will be those critics who shall maintain that AUGUSTIN'S words regard only the names of office, without any opinion on the powers or rank of the offices themselves.

1. Such a construction makes the Bishop assert a direct falsehood; the terms were in use from the beginning of the Christian Church; and, therefore, could not have been introduced by her customs.

2. If, by saying that he was superiour to Jerome "according to the names of honour which the Church had obtained by usage," Augustin meant that he enjoyed only a titular pre-eminence over that Presbyter, he either insulted Jerome by flouting at him with a lie in the shape of a compliment, or else the Prelates in his day had only a nominal, and not a real, power over the Presbyters. The second is contrary to fact; and the first is too absurd for even a troubled cardinal.

If, on the other hand, it be alleged that Augustin, in flattery to Jerome, seemed to claim only a titular precedence, while he was conscious, at the same time, of enjoying an essential superiority, and that by divine right, the disputant will turn himself out of the frying pan into the fire; for he exhibits the venerable father as acting the knave for the pleasure of proving himself to be a fool. So paltry a trick was not calculated to blow dust into the eyes of Jerome. The distinction might appear ingenious to some modern champions of the hierarchy, as it is much in their manner; but could never degrade the pen of the Bishop of Hippo. He is contrasting his official superiority over Jerome, with Jerome's personal superiority over himself. The former is the superiority of a Bishop over a Presbyter, which, he says, has grown out of the custom of the Church. The compliment to Jerome consists in this—that while the office which sets him above Jerome was the fruit, not of his own deserts, but of the Church's custom, those things which gave Jerome his superiority, were personal merits. The compliment is as fine, and its form as delicate, as the spirit which dictated it is magnanimous.

But our concern is with the fact which it discloses. Turn Augustin's words into a syllogism, and it will stand thus:

Augustin is greater than Jerome, according to the honours which have been created by the custom of the Church.

But Augustin is greater than Jerome, as a Bishop is greater than a Presbyter.

Therefore, a Bishop is greater than a Presbyter by the custom of the Church.

Here, now, is Augustin himself, a Bishop of no common character, disclaiming, unequivocally, the institution of Episcopacy by divine right: For he refers the distinction between Bishop and Presbyter not only to a merely human original, but to an original the least imperative; to one which, however potent it becomes in the lapse of time, is at first too humble to arrogate authority, too feeble to excite alarm, and too noiseless almost to attract notice. He calls it the creature of custom. What shall we say to this testimony of Augustin? He was under no necessity of revealing his private opinion. He had no temptation to sap the foundation of his own edifice; to diminish the dignity of his own order. All his interests and his prejudices lay in the opposite direction. Yet he speaks of Episcopacy as the child of custom, in the most frank and unreserved manner; without an apology, without a qualification, without a caution. He does this in a letter to Jerome, the very man to whom, upon modern Episcopal principles, he should not, would not, and could not have done it—the very man who had openly, and boldly, and repeatedly attacked the whole hierarchy; whose sentiments, reasonings, and proofs, were no secret to others, and could be none to him—the very man, whose profound research, whose vigorous talent, and whose imposing name, rendered him the most formidable adversary of the prelature, and threatened to sway more decisively the public opinion, than a thousand inferiour writers—the very man, therefore, whom it became his duty to resist. Yet to this man does Augustin, the Bishop, write a letter in which he assigns to Episcopacy the very same origin which Jerome himself had ascribed to it—human custom!!

Was Augustin ignorant? Was he treacherous? Was he cowardly? Was he mad? To write in this manner to Jerome! and to write it with as much composure, and sang froid, as he would have alluded to any the most notorious fact in existence! No. He was not ignorant, nor treacherous, nor cowardly, nor mad. But he spoke, in the honesty of his heart, what he knew to be true; and what no well advised man would think of denying. Such a concession, from such a personage, at such a time, under such circumstances, is conclusive. It shows, that in his day, the Bishops of the Latin Church did not dream of asserting their superiority to Presbyters by divine right. They had it from the custom of the Church, and so long as that custom was undisturbed, it was enough for them. Among the Greeks, the blundering, and hair-brained Epiphanius set up the claim of a jus divinum; but his contemporaries were discreet enough to let him fight so foolish a battle single handed.

To JEROME and AUGUSTIN we may add PELAGIUS, once their intimate friend, and afterwards, on account of his heresy, their sworn enemy. "He restricts all Church officers to priest and *deacon: and asserts, that priests, without discrimination or restriction, are the successors of the apostles."† He has more to the same purpose; reasoning as JEROME reasoned, from the Scriptures; and coming, as did SEDULIUS, PRIMASIUS, and others, to the same result; viz. the identity of Bishop and Presbyters.‡

Let not the heresy of Pelagius be objected to us. Our Arminians will not surely cast opprobrium upon the name of this, their ancient sire. For our parts, we, with Augustin, hold him in detestation, as an enemy of the grace of God. But his heresy does not vitiate his testimony in the present case. Fiercely as he was attacked by Jerome and Augustin, his opinions on the subject of Prelacy made no article of accusation against him as a heretic. Could it have been done with any show of reason, we may be certain it would not have been spared. But the silence of his Prelatical

* In Rom. xii. † In 1 Cor. i.

‡ Not having access to these writers, we quote from Jameson's Nazianzen: p. 176, 177.

antagonists, on that head, is a proof both of the justness of our foregoing comments on AUGUSTIN's letter, and also of the general fact, that the Bishops were conscious of their inability to meet the question of their order upon the ground of divine right.

There are two considerations which clothe our argument with additional force.

The first is, that all able heretics, as PELAGIUS confessedly was, in their assault upon the Church of God, direct their batteries against those points in which they deem her to be the least defensible Rightly judging, that it is good policy to make a breach, no matter where. Only unsettle the popular mind as to any one object which it has been accustomed to venerate, and the perversion of it with regard to many others, is much facilitated. If, in this policy, Pelagius and his coadjutors attacked the authority of the Bishops, they seized upon the defenceless spot; and the bishops were beaten without a struggle. It is easy to perceive what an immense advantage was gained by the heretics in their grand conflict, when their opponents were put fairly in the wrong on an incidental point, but a point which, in itself, touched the very nerves of the public passions.

The second consideration is, that persons of such different conditions, and such hostile feelings, could never have united in a common opinion upon a deeply interesting topic, had not the facts upon which their union rested been perfectly indisputable.

Here is Presbyter and Prelate; the monk of Palestine, and the African Bishop; orthodoxy and heresy; Augustin and Pelagius; all combining in one and the same declaration—that Episcopacy has no better original than the custom of the Church! Nothing but truth—acknowledged truth—truth which it was vain to doubt, could have brought these jarring materials into such a harmony; these discordant spirits into such a concurrence.—Stronger evidence it is hardly possible to obtain; and it would be the very pertness of incredulity to demand. Yet there are writers who do not blush to look us in the face, and assert that the testimony of the primitive Fathers is universally in favour of Episcopacy, as having been established by Christ and his apostles!!*

Does the sun shine? Is the grass green? Are stones hard? Another shove, and we shall be in Dean Berkeley's ideal world!—If every thing sober and solid is to be thus outfaced, there is nothing for it, but to abandon fact and demonstration as chimeras, and to take up what was once the ditty of a fool, but is now the best philosophy, Παντα κονις, και παντα ΓΕΛΩΣ, και παντα το ΜΗΔΕΝ.

* Essays, p. 135.

REVIEW

OF

HOBART'S APOLOGY.

REVIEW.

"An Apology for apostolic order and its advocates, occasioned by the strictures and denunciations of the Christian's Magazine. In a series of letters addressed to the Rev. John M. Mason, D. D., editor of that work. By the Rev. John Henry Hobart, an assistant minister of Trinity Church."

THE purpose of these letters, as their title indicates, is to depress the credit, and resist the influence, of the Christian's Magazine. That this work has claims to the dislike of high churchmen, we affect not to deny. One of its objects, although by no means the primary one, is to investigate, generally, the pretensions of the Episcopal hierarchy. As a means for accomplishing this particular end, it commenced a review of that "Collection of Essays," which Dr. Hobart republished in a single volume, with comments of his own. The reason of bringing his "collection" to a rigorous test, was not any thing original or peculiar in the "essays" themselves, but a conviction that when they should be fairly disposed of, neither Dr. H. nor Cyprian, nor the Layman, nor Cornelius, nor their friends, would have any more to say. Had these writers been shut up with their Bibles, their "Lexicons," and the fathers to whom they are constantly referring, a very small part of their lucubrations would have seen the light. Not they, but Archbishop Potter, and other, the most powerful advocates of the Episcopal church, are the real authors, under the signatures of Cyprian, the Layman, &c. The gentlemen who own these papers, must put up with the humbler praise of amanuenses to their greater predecessors. This they know as well as we, and they know too, what we also know, that when their arguments in the aforesaid collection shall be expended, the stock, to use a mercantile phrase, the stock in trade will be out.

Considering, therefore, that in taking up these essayists, the C. M. is directing its fire not against straggling detachments of her light infantry, but against her heavy armed troops, against her picked veterans, it was determined to begin with the hierarchy, as they ought to do who intend to proceed, and never to stop till they have successively cut her columns in pieces. And to this determination, however it may be relished, the C. M. will most religiously adhere.

The cry which is already set up, sufficiently ascertains the nature of the first impression. Dr. H.'s letters do not surprise us. We were aware that a style of criticism more decisive than has been customary in our literary journals, would, of itself, be in the eyes of many, an offence never to be expiated. But having counted the cost before we ventured upon the enterprise; having met with no opposition which we did not anticipate; and seeing no cause to repent of the steps which we have already taken, we shall continue to act upon the principle of reviewing authors, as authors, without regard to their party connexions; of calling things by their proper names; and of expressing ourselves as we think men ought to do who believe what they say; and who believe it to be important as well as true.

The letters before us we do not profess to answer. It would be incompatible with the limits of our miscellany; and we frankly acknowledge that, on some accounts, they are unanswerable. No man can refute rant, passion, or personal abuse. And if every thing composed of these items were expunged, Dr. H.'s pages would probably be, both in appearance and meaning, not very unlike the poem which the satyrical critic amended by drawing his pen through every other line. Had the editor of the Christian's Magazine no other concern with these letters than is created by their effect on him as an individual and a Presbyterian, he would have left them to their own operation, unmolested and unnoticed. But as the conductor of a periodical work to which the public has extended no common share of favor, and which more than Dr. H. have an interest in suppressing, he owes to his own responsibility, the compliment of a few strictures on that gentleman's volume.

The first number of the Christian's Magazine contains only preliminary remarks on the nature of the Episcopal pretensions. The second enters no further into their merits, than to state and enforce the argument for ministerial parity, drawn from the official titles of the New Testament; and to show that the contempt which the advocates of the hierarchy always pour upon it, arises from their perceiving that it is fatal to their cause; and, therefore, per fas per nefas, by fair means or by foul, must be set aside. Dr. H. not content with endeavoring to avert this blow from his church, has thought proper to retread the whole of the controverted ground: and, in defending her from the "denunciations," as he terms them, of the Christian's Magazine, to expatiate, at great length, upon several material topics, which it had not so much as touched. We have no objection. But as he has said nothing relative to the main question, which, for substance, had not already been said in the "collection" under review, we shall not now follow him. All that we judge of sufficient moment shall be noticed as we come up with it, in the regular course of discussion. We only pledge ourselves to prove, in the proper place, that with regard to the essential facts, his book is a mass of misrepresentations; and such misrepresentations, that when they are corrected, his argument perishes. Neither shall we here survey the caricatura which he has drawn of the Calvinistic doctrines. We reserve this for a separate criticism. We only express our regret that he has permitted himself to assail them in that same style of invective in which the Socinians vent their rancor against the atonement; and the infidels theirs against revelation.

Our review, therefore, of Dr. H.'s letters shall be chiefly confined to his reflections on those points which are treated of in the first two numbers of the Christian's Magazine. If our remarks ramble, the reader will remember, that Dr. H.'s being a desultory writer, is no fault of ours; and that we must take his works as he is pleased to publish them. But crude and rhapsodical as his letters are, they pursue, with undeviating consistency, two objects which continually force themselves upon the reader's attention. The first is to defeat the Christian's Magazine by rendering the Editor personally odious: and the second, to overthrow the Presbyterians, by inspiring a detestation of Calvinism. In the prosecution of this design, assertions and insinuations are huddled together with as little respect to facts, as if the principal business were not to write truth, but to write; and at the same time with an air of as great confidence as if the Rev. writer really knew what he is saying. Merely to show how closely his pen is leagued with the genius of mistake, we shall adduce two or three instances, which are in themselves of little significance.

"All the original productions in the number of the Magazine before me, with the exception of the essay on the Visible Church, point, with resistless evidence, to you as the author." p. 13.

The fact is quite otherwise. But it is not uncommon for Dr. H. and his friends to find "striking evidence," and "resistless evidence," of things which do not exist. However, as he has happened to guess right wrong, he is at liberty to guess again in his next octavo.

"During this period," viz. more than two years, "the plan of the Christian's Magazine has been arranging, materials collecting, and the matter preparing that was to enrich its pages. There has been full time for chastening the indignant and passionate review of the Essays on Episcopacy, by the gentle dictates of judgment and charity. The intemperate spirit which it breathes is left without even the excuse of precipitancy and rashness." p. 13, 14.

This paragraph requires no comment. Its undisguised purpose is to fix upon the editor the imputation of some of the worst passions that can rankle in the human heart. Dr. H. has forgotten his self-respect in alleging a false fact to justify a "railing accusation." His account of the Christian's Magazine, so far as we have quoted it, is a pure fabrication. But it is his unhappiness very often to deal out fiction, when he should be relating history.

Dr. H. derives consolation from defending the cause of Episcopacy in the same ranks with the "Eminent and revered bishops HALL, ANDREWS, SANDERSON, TAYLOR, BEVERIDGE, POTTER, WAKE, WILSON, HORNE, HORSELEY; the learned and pious divines, CHILLINGWORTH, HAMMOND, LESLIE, JONES; and "a legion more," illustrious for talents, for learning, and piety." p. 17.

Our reason for quoting this paragraph is, its classing bishop Horseley with Hall and Beveridge, as a man of piety. "Illustrious for talents and learning" he certainly was, but "piety" is the last thing of which his memory will be accused by any one acquainted with public character in Britain. On this subject we shall not tell all we know; but hold ourselves responsible for the truth of our assertion, which we should very reluctantly verify by specifying authentic particulars. We have no pleasure in stating such a fact at all; but mention it only as a strong instance of Dr. H.'s haste and inaccuracy; as a proof that his readers are not safe in relying upon his representations. We do not say nor insinuate that they are wilfully inaccurate; but that he is incessantly falling into error in matters of fact. If an inquirer be misled, it is the same to him whether his guide deceive him intentionally, carelessly, or ignorantly. Dr. H. has placed himself irretrievably in the predicament of those writers who "know a little, suppose much, and so jump to a conclusion"—which conclusion is generally wrong.

Dr. H. whether through oversight or design, we undertake not to decide, has coupled his subject as much as possible with personal feeling. By introducing the names of denominations and of individuals into the very heart of the argument in such a manner as to make them almost inseparable, he has reduced us to the dilemma of either saying nothing, and then our silence would be interpreted as it should suit the interpreter; or of exposing ourselves to the charge of personal rudeness. The C. M. scrupulously avoided all such references. It was not from want of power, but from a conviction of their impropriety, that it did not adopt them, with galling effect, on certain individuals who shall still be nameless. If therefore any thing that may be thought unceremonious shall drop from our pen, the displeased reader must hold Dr. H. accountable.

After a very grotesque, and, as we think, unseemly, parody on the official phraseology of the President of the United States, and a shrewd hint that fear was a principal cause of delaying the appearance of the C. M. Dr. H. thus explains the commencement of the discussions which are now taking place.

"A hero, however, no less renowned than the Rev. Dr. Linn, not taught wisdom by the salutary lessons which he had received some years ago from the "Right Rev. Prelate of New York," in a theological contest, felt all the vigor and ardor of his youthful days renewed. Indignant at this delay, and spurning the restraints of his compeers, he rushed forward to spread dismay among the Episcopalians, and, single-handed, cover them with defeat. In his numbers styled "Miscellanies," published in the Albany Centinel, he attacked the principles of the Episcopalians. He was instantly met—met, and vanquished by striplings inferior to this venerable giant in literature and theology, in every thing but the goodness of their cause, and judgment in defending it." p. 9, 10.

The custom of leaping at Rhodes,* we perceive is still in fashion. It will be time enough for Dr. H. to boast of his stripling friends having "vanquished" Dr. L. when the fact is ascertained. The testimony in evidence is not yet closed. The courteous manner of using Dr. Linn, as a foil not only to the "Right Rev. Prelate," but to the "striplings" who are his equals in "judgment," is entirely in the spirit of a system very prevalent among the sons of the hierarchy —the system of praising each other.

In this instance, however, the panegyrist has overshot his mark. Of all the human faculties judgment arrives the last at maturity; for it depends the most upon experience, and is, for that reason, the least cultivated in youth of the very best natural endowments. Had we put an Episcopal gentleman of acknowledged abilities and literature, on a level with any of our own "striplings" in the article of "judgment," we could hardly have hoped to escape with a rebuke for being merely indecorous. We refer observations like these to Dr. H.'s less precipitate moments. In the mean time, as he has introduced his diocesan to our notice, in a manner which cannot but be flattering to his connexions, we shall embrace this occasion of presenting to our readers a sample of that "salutary" instruction which he bestowed, without effect, on Dr. Linn.

* Vide Esop's Fables, F. 14. ed. Oxon. 1718.

It was not our wish to say a word which might have an unfriendly aspect toward a prelate who is deservedly esteemed in society, and is distinguished for amiable manners, and polite literature. But as Dr. H. has employed his pencil in historical painting, we cannot refuse to look at his picture, and to supply what is lacking in its explanation. Yonder, in the back ground, lies a hapless wight; his head uncovered, his weapons shivered, his body transfixed. This, the painter informs us, is Dr. Linn, the Presbyterian, who has just reaped the reward of his folly in not profiting by the "salutary lessons which he had received some years ago from the Right Rev. Prelate of New York." Alas, my brother! More conspicuous on the canvas are two figures in an erect attitude; their backs are toward the prostrate presbyter, and their ruddy countenances express the triumph of conquerors. These, the painter tells us, are the "striplings," who have just avenged their Alma Mater, the hierarchy, by making the wicked presbyter aforesaid, who had breathed upon her good name, to "bite the dust."—Here, is portrayed a personage who, the painter lets us know, is the prelate already mentioned. We were somewhat anxious to learn the particulars of his prowess; but the painter stopped short, and we were obliged to repair to other sources of information. Having, in common with other people, a little memory, we recollected something very like a "gigantic" feat, in the contest to which Dr. H. alludes in the extract quoted above. We turned to the pamphlets of the day, and in one of them met with the following sentences.

> Above the rest
> In shape and gesture proudly eminent,

"There is a general propensity in men to form gods unto themselves; in contemplating the character of the Deity, to dwell chiefly on those attributes which are most congenial to the prevailing dispositions of their own hearts. The mild, the meek, the merciful, love to describe God as a being whose tender mercies are over all his works; the passionate, the arrogant, the tyrannical, take delight in speaking of him as an almighty sovereign, who worketh all things according to the purpose of his own will, and whose glory is as much displayed in the perdition of sinners, as it is in the salvation of the righteous."*

The reader will observe that the words in

* See The doctrine of baptismal regeneration vindicated against the objections of Dr. Linn, and others: to which is added, Dr. Waterland's discourse on the same subject. By Benjamin Moore, D. D. New York, Printed by Hugh Gaine, at the Bible, in Hanover-Square, 1793. p. 20.

Italics are scriptural expressions. The last occurs in Eph. i. 11 : "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of him who worketh all things after the counsel of his own will."

Dr. Moore says, that they are the "passionate, the arrogant, and the tyrannical," who take delight in such a representation of God. Yet this is the representation given of him by the inspired apostle; and that, when he is celebrating in the fulness of gratitude, of tenderness, and of love, the praise of the glory of God's grace wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved. v. 6.

This is a representation on which the Scriptures dwell as much as upon any other. Nor is there scarcely either a prophet or an apostle, but will have, by Dr. Moore's rule, the brand of passion, and arrogance, and tyranny, imprinted on him. Will he maintain that there is any attribute of God, which "the mild, the meek, the merciful," do not delight to contemplate? Then he will maintain that there are attributes of God at variance with mildness, and meekness, and mercy. Then, if we rejoice because the Lord reigneth—if we pray that his will may be done in earth, as it is done in heaven, where it is never disputed, and must be absolute—if we join with the nations of the saved—with the holy apostles and prophets—with the very heaven, in rejoicing at the execution of the divine judgments,* we must be turned over among the "passionate, the arrogant, the tyrannical."

It would be well if this stroke of Dr. M. struck no deeper: but since the passage which he has pointed out as congenial with the prevailing dispositions of the "passionate, the arrogant, the tyrannical," together with innumerable passages of the same sort, were dictated by the Holy Spirit, the implication is very strong, that there are some of Jehovah's perfections in which he himself does not delight; or else he, too, must be smitten with the charge of passion, and arrogance, and tyranny!

We make these remarks with more pain than we wish our opponents ever to suffer. Dr. H. has compelled us.

We should extend our remarks to an unreasonable length, were we to rectify all the mistakes and improprieties of these Letters. Nearly every page abounds with materials for comments which no moderation of manner could render much more acceptable to the Rev. author, than the original review which has thrown his temper so entirely off its balance. A man who writes in great haste, and under the goadings of irritation, easily fills up a volume, because he has neither time nor inclination to be nice in the selection of its contents. This, indeed, gives him no claim to the indulgence of criticism; but as it marks his literary offspring for early decease, it supersedes a vast amount of ungrateful labour; and as it bespeaks more need of medicine than of chastisement, it rather pleads for compassion, than rouses indignation.

* Rev. xviii. 20. xix. 1—7. The precise view under which the miliennial church is represented as delighting in God, is that of an "Almighty sovereign." Alleluia! for the LORD GOD OMNIPOTENT reigneth. v. 6.

Instead, therefore, of troubling ourselves with copious extracts from Dr. H.'s declamations, we shall remit them, for the most part, to the judgment of the reader. We are entirely willing that he should pronounce sentence, after comparing Dr. H.'s "Apology" with the "Christian's Magazine," on points which are discussed in both. We request, however, a single favour; that he will ask himself, on perusing the Magazine, whether he can or cannot form a correct idea of the nature and strength of the Episcopal argument? and again, on perusing the Apology, whether he can or cannot form a correct idea of the nature and strength of the argument in the Magazine? This will help him to determine on which side the fault of misrepresentation lies.

In our first number we had observed, that the non-Episcopalians will probably view Dr. H.'s apology for himself, "as a stratagem, and not a very deep one, to avoid the unpopularity of appearing as the aggressor." By this remark, and a page or two preceding it, he is so extremely nettled as to enter upon a formal vindication, in which he endeavours to prove that hostilities were commenced on the other side. If the recrimination has given him any relief, we do not wish, and shall not attempt, to interrupt his repose. Let him have it in his own way. It is really so trifling a part of the discussion, that we shall waste very little time or paper upon it. However, we wonder that while he was about it, the fervent apologist did not carry the chronology of the warfare further back, and date it from presbyter Jerome, in the fourth century. This would have been doing business to some purpose. For our part, had the Episcopal divines and writers contented themselves with declaring their predilection for their own system, as most agreeable to Scripture and antiquity; had they not boasted of their pre-eminence in such a manner as to throw over the line of covenanted mercy, all the non-Episcopal churches under heaven; we should not have embarked in this controversy. They might have said and sung, "It is evident unto all men diligently reading holy Scripture and ancient authors, that from the apostles' time, there have been three orders of ministers in Christ's church, bishops, priests and deacons."* as often, as loud, and as long as they thought fit. This never provoked the contest. But when they proceeded to shut out from covenanted mercy, all churches which do not receive their "bishops, priests and deacons," the case was altered. Patience ceased to be a virtue: Passiveness became a crime. We were summoned to the defence, not merely of our external order, but of that "liberty wherewith Christ has made us free;" of that "hope by the which we draw nigh unto God." And, "having put our hand to the plow," it is our unalterable purpose, as his grace shall enable us, not "to look back."

* Preface to the book of consecrating and ordering bishops, priests, and deacons, as quoted in Detector, No 11. Essays on Episcopacy, p. 105.

We take our final leave of this question, with a word or two on the justification which Dr. H. and his friends have set up. "My single object," says he, "was the instruction of Episcopalians."* His works are declared by the Layman to be "addressed to Episcopalians alone.† Is it so? Where then was their vaunted charity, in trying to conceal from others, or not trying to extend to them, the knowledge of truth upon the admission or rejection of which depends admission to, or exclusion from, God's covenanted mercy? Is it thus that Charity behaves towards the souls of men?

But how is all this to be reconciled with what these same gentlemen tell us, when they are occupied with another view of their subject? For brevity's sake, we quote the Layman only, as he is particularly pointed, and as his papers have been republished, with unqualified approbation, by Dr. H. himself.

* Apology, p. 36. † No. III. Coll. p. 32.

"Let it be recollected that error is venial only in proportion as it is involuntary. How, then, shall that man excuse himself, who, having been WARNED of the defect of the ministry at whose hands he receives the ordinances of the gospel, neglects, nevertheless, to give attention to the subject, and to examine dispassionately, those works which prove the necessity of union with that church, the validity of whose ministrations even its most inveterate opponents are obliged to acknowledge."*

On the Layman's principles, such a case cannot exist. For in the very next page, he maintains, that "those who have departed from Episcopacy, have no spiritual authority whatever; have no ministers; and no ORDINANCES." How we are to "receive the ordinances of the gospel," in churches which have "no ministers, and no ordinances," exceeds our comprehension.

This en passant. We are reduced, it seems, to a hard predicament. In the first place, we have nothing to do with works which prove the necessity of union with the Episcopal church, such as those published by Dr. H.; because they are "addressed to Episcopalians alone;" and, in the next place, we are without excuse for neglecting to examine them. We are WARNED, it is said, of the defect of our ministry. Warned! By whom? Not by our own ministry. They perceive not the fatal defect. Not by Dr. H.'s works; they were intended for none but Episcopalians! and yet we are to be without excuse! another sample of charity, we suppose. Very possibly, however, this good office is performed by the advices and admonitions of the Layman. We are much his debtors; especially as in not yielding to his voice, we encounter the hazard of forfeiting, by voluntary error, all claim upon mercy, covenanted or uncovenanted. So that we, miserable sinners that we are, we can hardly escape from the alternative of "Episcopacy or perdition," with all the charity of Dr. H. to help us. Of this enough.

* Layman, No. IX. Collect. p. 158.

Our fiery apologist represents the strictures of the C. M. as "an unjust, ungenerous, and cruel appeal to prejudice and passion"—an appeal "precluding all candid and dispassionate inquiry." Nay, such an appeal "as even an honest political declaimer, in the mad fervour of party zeal, would not use without a blush."* The sacredness of conscience, and the decorum of religion all apart, as unworthy of its regard, the C. M. breathes a spirit, and has employed arts, which befit none but a political knave! Very decent and modest, we own. A pure, untainted ebullition of "that meekness of celestial wisdom" in which the Rev. Apologist has promised to defend the "apostolic church!"† And then, by way of exhibiting to the world how far he is himself removed from every thing like "prejudice and passion," he turns advocate-general of all that the C. M. had censured, not forgetting N. G. Dufief! He has tried to impress on individuals, mentioned by name, the opinion that we have personally insulted them. From that part of Dr. Nott's address, which recommends the character of Christ as the perfect model of imitation, he has garbled a passage; leaving out the very words on which we laid the whole stress of our criticism; and a part which not only we never condemned, but which it is impossible we should condemn, he has held up to the reader's eye, as furnishing us with an occasion of painting the Rev. President of Union College, as a "perjured hypocrite!"* He has done more. The introduction to the C. M. draws a rapid outline of evils which infest the church of God. The characteristics which it has sketched, are general. Originals we undoubtedly had in view; but we made no applications. Dr. H. has taken this work off our hands, and off the hands of the reader too. He sallies forth with his basket of caps, and in the name of the editor of the Christian's Magazine, puts one on the head of almost every denomination he meets. It is proper, however, to state that the labels, "Quakers," "Methodists," "Episcopalians," &c., were affixed to our nameless caps, on the responsibility of the Apologist. He has acquitted himself in this volunteered service, with a judgment perfectly parallel to his accuracy in matters of historical fact. We are under no obligation to correct his blunders. But as he ought to be well acquainted with his own church, and perceives her to be described by those who, "like the self-justifiers of old, 'tithe mint, and anise, and cummin,' little concerned about either receiving Christ Jesus the Lord, or walking in him, provided they be exact in their routine of ceremonies;"* we have no sort of objection to her wearing the cap which her good and dutiful son has appropriated to her use.

* Apology, p. 13. † Ibid. p. 15.

* Apology, p. 23, 24.

Commonly in such cases, the affront lies not in the description, but in the application.—Should a hearer of Dr. H.'s run away with a sermon of his against various sins, and say to A, "this was for you;" to B, "this was certainly for you;" to C, "here is something which was not intended for you, but the next sentence can mean nobody else;" and should do this with a design of persuading them that he meant to excite the hatred of their neighbours against them, who would be the firebrand? Dr. H. or his officious interpreter? Just so has he served us. Not we, then, but Dr. H. has abused the surrounding denominations. The inflammatory suggestions are his own. And, in the very act of making them, he inveighs against us for "appealing to prejudice and passion!"

Another source of tribulation to this "meek"

* Apology, p. 18.

apologist, is in the pride, the bitterness, the imperiousness, the virulence, the despotism, the arrogance, &c. &c. &c. of the C. M.* Unhappy gentleman! Denunciations, and thunder, and bolts, and blastings, and chains, and inquisitions, and racks, are constantly present to his imagination, and fill it with a wildness which, like that of Sir William Draper, has the "melancholy madness of poetry, without the inspiration."†

Being, therefore, greatly scandalized at our insolence aforesaid, Dr. H. not only bestows upon us his kind rebukes by the dozen and the score, but offers himself as a contrast which must put us to shame. "Sweet as summer," and "serene as light," his silvered sentences, and his Attic wit, shall flow unimbittered with resentment, unstained with injuriousness, unruffled by the breath of indecorum. A noble resolution, and nobly kept. We give both text and comment; both promise and fulfilment, in his own words:

TEXT.

"My own determination is unalterably formed in that firm language which conscious truth inspires, but in that 'meekness of celestial wisdom' which the gospel enjoins, to defend the apostolic church, at whose altar I minister, against every weapon that is formed against her."

COMMENT.

"Presumptuous men!" (meaning himself, the Layman, and Cyprian,) "luckless was the hour when ye provoked the wrath of the learned Dr. M., that paragon of talents, who, glowing with intuitive knowledge, can exhaust any subject without reading a page, or consulting any author.

* Apology, p. 7, 18–25, 33, 25–30, 240. † Junius, Let. VII.
‡ Apology, p. 16.

"But, Sir, (I am almost afraid to expostulate with you, lest I should provoke your heavier vengeance,) it was not quite fair, it was not quite generous and manly, (modesty I know is an unfashionable virtue,) to overwhelm by your dazzling talents, three humble individuals, who have reached only the first steps of the temple of science, whose vestibule you have long since passed, whose sacred recesses you have already explored. At our period of life, eight or ten years may make an important difference in the sum of attainments. And, through the good providence of God, we can look forward to at least as many years before we shall equal the present age of our giant censor. When as many suns have rolled over our heads as have shed their collected glories upon him, perhaps, (alas! is not the hope presumptuous?)—perhaps, (despair almost arrests my pen,)—perhaps we may equal in erudition, the profoundly learned Dr. M. At present, we lay claim to sufficient learning and talent to defend the Episcopal Church against any adversary. Even the sneers, and frowns, and haughty airs of the Editor of the Christian's Magazine, we can summon resolution to smile at, and to disregard."*

Upon the civility of this passage, we say nothing. It will never subject the writer to any raillery for being unfashionable. But to hope that it should be read without relaxed muscles, would be an unconscionable demand upon the gravity of Cato himself. After the high ground which these warriors had taken, their military attitude, their formidable train of bishops and fathers, and their strong defiance to the Presbyterian camp, to scream out so piteously at the very first fire, and tell all the world that they are now raw lads, but with the privilege of learning their tactics for eight or ten years, they will give a good account of their foe, is diverting enough. We had supposed that when we died of old age, it would be time for these gentlemen to make their wills. But we must own that Dr. H. has displayed so much of the boy, as to leave us at a loss on that weighty matter. "Pray, Dr.," said Lady W. to the late principal Robertson, as she was flirting in a large company, with all the airs and petulancies of a girlish coquette, "Pray, Dr., how old do you think I am?" "Really, Madam," replied the sage, "I cannot pretend to know; but I should suppose that your Ladyship has not arrived at the years of discretion." Judging from the morceau which we have selected, and which is by no means alone in Dr. H.'s writings, we should conclude that he is somewhere in his teens. Whether he shall ever get out of them or not, the future must reveal. We have done with this also.

* Apology, p. 240, 241.

The Christian's Magazine, in consequence, as we thought, of sufficient evidence from their own publications, had charged Dr. Hobart and some of his brethren, with teaching that there is no Christian ministry but the Episcopal ministry; no church of Christ but the Episcopal church; and that all without her pale are excluded from the covenanted mercies of God.*

Such tenets, as we have several times observed, although mollified with a pretty large allowance for "involuntary and unavoidable ignorance or error," we felt it our duty to resist, not only with firmness, but with a portion of that indignant spirit which we then thought, and still think, the outrage both justified and required. We do not mean an outrage upon the opinions, the partialities, the vanity, or the wishes, of other denominations. Uncharitableness and bigotry, against which the million exclaim with so much noise and so little intelligence, made no part of our accusation; and shall make none hereafter. Their relative weight in the scale of judgment, is lighter than a feather. The outrage which we deemed it no meekness to bear, nor any insolence to chastise, was committed, at least in our view, against the "truth as it is in Jesus;" and against the character, the peace, and the hope of thousands of his most exemplary followers.

* Christian's Magazine, Vol. I. p. 93–97.

Our remarks on this subject, Dr. Hobart resents as unfounded, injurious, and even cruel. We quote his sixth letter.

"Your other charges," viz. besides that of aggression, "may be thus summed up:

"That I maintain, that communion with the Episcopal priesthood is a condition of salvation which is not only indispensable on the part of man, (in which sense I apply the word indispensable,) but which God himself will not dispense with; and that 'the simple fact of separation from the Episcopal priesthood' renders all repentance and faith unavailing, 'mars the religion of non-Episcopalians, and renders it stark naught!'—and that thus I make the "only alternative, EPISCOPACY OR PERDITION!!"*

* Christian's Magazine, p. 94, 95.

"That I 'make particular views of external order, the hinging point of salvation'*—that I 'place the external order of the Church, upon a level with the merits of our Lord Jesus, in the article of acceptance before God;'†—that, with respect to non-Episcopalians, I make Episcopacy of primary, and faith in the Redeemer of secondary importance;'†—and that I maintain that 'faith in Christ is impossible where there is no communion with the Bishop.'†

"Now, sir, before you can be 'justified in uttering a syllable which only looks towards conclusions,' which hold me up as a monster of arrogance and impiety, unfit to be tolerated among Christians, you ought to be not only 'perfectly certain of your premises,' but that your conclusions also are fairly and legitimately drawn.

"I utterly disclaim the sentiments you impute to me.

"I utterly deny the truth of your charges.

"I pledge myself to prove that you support them by partial and false views of my opinions—by uncandidly torturing them to an extreme—and by illogical deductions which a just reasoner should blush to make, and a candid reasoner should scorn to enlist into his service.

"I pledge myself to prove that the same uncandid methods would attach the same odium to your own principles; and that I lay no greater stress on external order, on communion with the church through its ministry and ordinances, than the standards and confessions of faith of the Presbyterian churches will warrant."

We have examined, and re-examined our offensive review: We have "accompanied" our angry correspondent "through the pages of our Magazine;" and after listening attentively to his remonstrances, cannot perceive that he has convicted us of any material inaccuracy. But, seeing that he explicitly disclaims the opinions imputed to him, we as explicitly acquit him per- sonally, from the imputation: and we do no more than we had virtually done already. In expressing his charity for non-Episcopalians, he had, in effect, renounced the consequences which we deduced from his doctrines. This no extraordinary penetration was needful to discover. Our debate, therefore, from the beginning, was not with the man, but with the writer. We are not sure that Dr. H. will thank us for the distinction: as, by supposing that he may be a very good man, and yet a very bad logician, it saves his philanthropy at the expense of his discernment. But our concessions can go no further. For he has neither invalidated our reasonings, nor supported his own doctrine with additional proof.

* Christian's Magazine, p. 98. † Ibid. p. 99.

Dr. H.'s defence against the charges under consideration, resolves itself into two parts; the one is an attempt to show that "The same uncandid and unfair arts," viz. as those employed by the C. M. "would involve many of our principles in odium, and fix on us consequences of our opinions, which we will doubtless abhor and disclaim."*—"Let us suppose," says the Apologist, "some ingenious sophist resolves to dispute Dr. Mason's pretensions to superiority in the arts of plausible but false deduction, of blackening opinions that they may be 'urged over the precipice.' He opens the Christian's Magazine, and thus breaks a lance with its giant editor."†

Dr. H. then goes on to show how an ingenious sophist would acquit himself "in the arts of plausible but false deduction." The sophistry is palpable enough; the ingenuity is not quite so clear. But it appears to us to be fully as sound and conclusive as any other reasoning in that part of the "Apology" which we are now reviewing. The question, which Dr. H. after all his lucubrations, has left pretty nearly where he found it, still recurs, Whether his claims on behalf of the Episcopal church, do or do not justify our construction? Dr. H. replies, No! And his attempt to establish the negative, constitutes the other part of his defence. This, to our apprehension, contains little more than assertions and explanations of his "charity," repeated, and repeated, and repeated, till the point to be settled is lost in the multitude and the glitter of words; or else in disowning a consequence, he repudiates a principle; and in again espousing the principle, invites the consequence: thus giving in one breath, and taking back in the next: and in this alternation of giving and taking, exhibiting a most curious struggle between his charity and his logic.

* Apology, p. 69. † Ib.

If, however, it is true, that we have so grossly mistaken and misrepresented the principles of Dr. H. and his friends, and their predecessors, as he pretends, we have the consolation of erring in company which he will not deny to be respectable. The first of our fellow-trespassers is no less a personage than Archbishop Wake, under whose wing Dr. H. is proud to cower. Before and during the time of this learned and amiable prelate, a number of Episcopal writers advanced the very same claims which have recently been revived by Daubeny, Hobart, &c. And he did not scruple to tell them that they "were out of their senses." "God forbid," says he, in a letter to the famous Le Clerc, "God forbid that I should be so iron-hearted, as on account of such a defect," viz. the want of Episcopal order, "to believe that some of them," the foreign Protestant churches, "should be cut off from our communion; or with certain insane writers among us, to pronounce that they have no true and valid sacraments; and so are hardly Christians."*

The archbishop, it seems, construed these exclusive claims as we have done; and he has called their advocates by much harsher names than we choose to adopt. Pray was this "eminent and revered Bishop," as Dr. H. terms him, "uncandid and unfair?" Was he, too, an "ingenious sophist," versed in the "arts of plausible but false deduction?" Did he, too, pursue "an unrelenting system of intemperate denunciation?"† Surely it was rather mal-a-propos to break the head of his grace of Canterbury with a stroke aimed at a poor Presbyterian!

* Interim absit ut ego tam ferrei pectoris sim, ut ob ejus modi defectum (sic mihi absque omni invidia appellare liceat) aliquas earum a communione nostra abscindendas credam; aut cum quibusdam furiosis inter nos scriptoribus, eas nulla vera ac valida sacramenta habere, adeoque vix Christianos esse pronuntiem. Letter to Le Clerc, April, 1719. Appen. to Mosheim's History, vol .6. App. III. No. xxi. p. 124.

† Apology, p. 18.

We have taken this retrospect merely to show the continuity of the exclusive system of Dr. H. and his friends, and the light in which it has been viewed by great men in his own church. To prove that the very same consequences are, at this moment, drawn from it by high churchmen themselves, we select the following instance out of several which we have before us, and well authenticated.

In the fall of 1806, a young gentleman, extremely attached to the Episcopal church, and an advocate for the doctrine of baptismal regeneration, was led, by mere curiosity, to a weekly evening lecture in one of the neighbouring non-Episcopal churches. The subject, which was our Lord's conversation with Nicodemus on the new birth, arrested his attention, and the argument went home to his heart. He became convinced that he had been in fatal error as to the ground of his eternal hope; an entire revolution was wrought in his sentiments and character; and, at length, under more sound and evangelical views, he applied to the minister whose labours had been blessed to him, for admission to the Lord's table. After giving a satisfactory account of his Christianity, he was desired to ask from his Episcopal pastor a certificate of dismission: his friend at the same time remarked, "Although he does not acknowledge me to be a lawful minister of the Gospel, yet I deem it proper to day him this compliment." The certificate was asked; but, instead of giving it, the Episcopal clergyman broke out into an invective against the youth; told him "he deserved to be excommunicated—that he was leaving the way of salvation—that Jesus Christ would reject him at the great day—and that he," the clergyman, "would be witness against him!!"

The reader may rely upon the fact. We have place, names, and authority to give, should it be denied. The clergyman is well known; and has distinguished himself as an advocate of "the church;" and, with all deference to Dr. H. his construction of her claims appears to us to be not unlike "Episcopacy or perdition!"

But to cut this whole matter short—God has either promised eternal life to non-Episcopalians who believe in Christ, or he has not. If he has, they have a complete claim upon covenant mercy —If he has not, it is the height of presumption in the Episcopalians to promise for him; and the height of folly in the others to believe them. To tell us that when they "maintain that communion with the Episcopal priesthood is an indispensable condition of salvation," they only mean "indispensable on the part of man," is a most singular explanation. Do they really imagine, that the world is in danger of ascribing to them a right to alter the conditions of salvation? After all their explanations, the question recurs, whether God will dispense with this their darling condition, or not? If not, then again, our alternative is "Episcopacy or perdition." If he will, and if he does; if, notwithstanding our refusal to acknowledge the prelates, we may be accepted in his dear Son, may live in the light of his countenance, and die in the joy of his salvation, it is enough for us. We shall give ourselves very little trouble about a dispensation from the Episcopal priesthood! They need not be uneasy: we are far enough from supposing that they have any power of dispensing with God's appointments. But to proclaim communion with them an indispensable condition of salvation; and then not only to concede that God is dispensing with this condition every hour; but that they should be "monsters of arrogance and impiety," to doubt it, is worse than trifling. For, in order to support a favourite hypothesis, it engenders a false and pernicious notion of the HOLY ONE of Israel, as perpetually departing from his own plan, reversing his own law, contradicting his own revelation; whereas he is, for he has himself said it, the father of lights, with whom is no VARIABLENESS neither SHADOW OF TURNING.*

It is now time to have done with this Apology. Were we to expose all its sophisms, perversions, mistakes, and puerilities, we should weary ourselves without profiting the reader. We are perfectly content that our argument for ministerial equality, which Dr. H. has undertaken to answer, shall stand before any competent tribunal, and speak for itself, against all his accusations, without the aid of counsel. We shall, therefore, take our leave of him, after presenting the reader with a pretty strong example of his correctness in his facts.

* JAMES i. 17.

"When the Secession took place in Scotland, the Seceders were solemnly excommunicated by the Established Church; and when the Seceders split into the two sects of Burghers, and Anti-Burghers, they excommunicated each other. In like manner, when, in this country, some of the ministers of the Associate Presbytery, consisting chiefly of Anti-Burghers, seceded from that Presbytery, and, in conjunction with some of the Ministers of the Reformed Presbytery, formed a new church under the denomination of the Associate-Reformed Church, (of which you are a minister,) sentences of excommunication were formally passed."†

Dr. H.'s first assertion is, that "The Seceders were solemnly excommunicated by the established Church."

This is not true—the seceding ministers, to the number of eight, were, in 1740, deposed by the General Assembly of the church of Scotland. No excommunication took place, even of them; far less of "the seceders," who were a large body of people; and this censure was not inflicted till seven years after the secession had commenced.

Dr. H.'s second assertion is, that,

"When the Seceders split into the two sects of Burghers and Anti-Burghers, they excommunicated each other."

† Apology, p. 216, 217.

This is not true—The Antiburghers did, indeed, pronounce a sentence of excommunication upon the Burghers; but it was never reciprocated.

Dr. H.'s third assertion is, that,

"In like manner, when, in this country, some of the ministers of the Associate Presbytery, consisting chiefly of Anti-Burghers, seceded from that Presbytery, and in conjunction with some ministers of the Reformed Presbytery, formed a new church, under the denomination of the Associate-Reformed Church, sentences of excommunication were formally passed."

Unless the writer has purposely provided for tergiversation, the only meaning which can be put upon this paragraph is, that the two bodies alluded to, mutually excommunicated each other. This is mere fiction; no such excommunications ever existed.

Here, now, are three sentences together, containing the same number of gross errors in matters of fact; of fact, comparatively recent; and of which, authentic accounts are within every one's reach—Three sentences; and an error a-piece! Not much amiss for a controvertist who has "learning enough to defend the Episcopal church!" And a very comfortable pledge of the security with which his readers may repose upon his representations!

INDEX.

A.

page

Act of Uniformity in England 91
Angel 138
Angel of the Church . . 148
Apocalypse, Symbols of . 147
Apostles and Evangelists . 92 ——— and Presbyters . 117
———, Commission of . 95
———, Double capacity of 119
Apostolic Testimony . 217
Assembly at Jerusalem . 130
Augustine 254
Authority of Presbyters . 108
Ayton's Christian Church 175

B.

Baptism of the Prelate of New-York 23
Bellarmine 225
Beveridge, Comment of . 168
Bingham 174
Bishops and Presbyters . 37

C.

Candlesticks of John . . 145
Change of Names . . 63
Character of James . . 122
——— of Timothy . 153
——— of Titus . . 153
Charles I. 91
Chrysostom 155
Church at Smyrna . . 149
——— Government . . 29
——— in our Lord's time 86
Claims of the Episcopalians 16
Commission of the Seventy 95
——— of Timothy . 196
——— of Titus . 196

page

Communion denied to non-Episcopalians . . . 34
Companion for the Altar . 16 ——— for the Fasts and Festivals 29

D.

Daillé, Testimony of . . 173
Daubeny on Prelacy . 31
Deacons 41
Δια 158
Diocesan Episcopacy not sustained by Scripture . . 39
Distinction of terms . . 46
Dodwell 176

E.

ΗΓΕΟΜΑΙ . . . 108
Elders 59
Elevation of Presbyters, a human contrivance . . 233
Episcopacy determined . 39
——— from the custom of the Church . . . 261
——— or perdition . 27
Episcopal arguments . . 190 ——— fiction . . 73
——— priesthood . . 80
Episcopalian proscription . 25
Epistles to the Seven Churches of Asia . . 133
Eucharistic Sacrifice . 98
Eusebius 201
Evangelists 200

F.

Facts of the New Testament 104
Feasts and Festivals . 29

page
Five-mile Act . . . 91
Form of Church government 29
Fulke, Evidence of . . 141

G.

Government 114
——— of the Church . 29

H.

Hammond on Elders . . . 59
Hands, imposition of . 165
Hesychius 123
Hoadley 204

I.

Identity of Bishops and Presbyters 39
Imposition of hands . . 165

J.

James, not a prelate . . 129
———, official character of 122
Jerome, Epistle of, to Evagrius 229
———, Testimony of . 225
Jewish Priesthood . . 67
John, Revelation by . 106
John the Baptist . . . 87

L.

Levitical Priesthood . . 80

M.

Matthias 101
Mede, Testimony of . 141
Μετα 158
Methodists 36
Ministry of the New Testament 78
———, parallel of the . 75
Moore, statement of . . 140

N.

Names, use of 44
Nature of the Succession . 89
Νεοφωτες 192
New Testament, Facts of . 104
New Testament, Ministry of 78

O.

Official character of James . 122
Orders of Priesthood . 86 Ordination by Timothy . 169
page
Ordination by Titus. . . 170
Origin of the work . . 15

P.

Parallelisms 190
Parallel of the Ministry . 75
Pearson, Statement of . . 209
Pelagius 259
Perdition or Prelacy . . 27
ΠΟΙΜΑΙΝΩ 110
Potter on Church-government 122
Power of government . 108
Prelacy mischievous . . 207
——— or perdition . . 27
Prelates unknown in the Apostolic Churches . . 105
Preparative ministry . 102
Presbyter 47
Presbyters 110
———, Authority of . 108
Presbytery 160
Priesthood, Jewish . . 87
———, Levitical . 80
———, Orders of . . 86
ΠΡΟΙΣΤΑΜΑΙ . . . 109
ΠΡΟΙΣΤΗΜΙ . . . 109
Proscription by Prelatists . 25

R.

Revelation, by John . . 106
Rodgers, John, of New-York 132
Rulers 109

S.

Sacrifice of the Eucharist . 98
Salazar, Exposition of . 161
Sermon, by Wright . . 23
Seven Churches, Epistles to 133
Seventy, Commission of . 93
Shepherds 111
Smyrna, Church of . . 149
"Star" 138
Stillingfleet . . . 142, 177
Succession of the Priesthood 89
Symbols of the Apocalypse . 141

T.

Terms designate Officers . 58
Testimony of the Apostles . 217
Theodoret 57
Theophylact 155
Timothy, Character of . 153
Titus, Ordination of . . 169

page
Titus, Character of . . 153
——, Commission of . 196
——, Ordination by . . 170
Tradition 243
Triple order of Priesthood . 87
Twelve, and Seventy . 93
Typical functions . . 81 ——— officers . . 81

Page
U.
Uniformity, Act of . . 91
Use of Names . . . 44
Usher, Testimony of . . 225

W.
Whitaker 179
Willet 177
Wright, Sermon by . . 23

THE END.